The Cold Shoulder and the Haughty Stare—

Really he was the college football hero, but in her presence he was a frozen worm!

Mother was a social climber who had taught "the snob" to raise her shoulder at persons like waiters—and our hero certainly was a waiter!

But she had a lesson coming to her—and she got it—in that laugh-stocked comedy of genuine American youth and love and college life:

"THE SNOB"

A Realart Star Franchise Picture Featuring Wanda Hawley.

It gets you, this picture, like the three-long-'rahs-and-a-tiger at a football game. And it stirs something deeper than just enthusiasm over the game—it makes you mighty proud to be an American in America, where snobbery just can’t get by. That’s the idea! "The Snob," adapted from a story by William J. Neidig, is as American as the Statue of Liberty.

It will shake your theatre roof with cheers. It is exactly 100 per cent entertainment.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .... 5,744 feet

The first and most important thing about “Nineteen and Phyllis” is that Charles Ray plays the part of a young dandy instead of the awkward country boy. But even with this change Charlie is the same Charlie, and the same mannerisms peep out from under his slick regalia. He’s an ambitious young fellow in the kind of town where “dances” are the rage with the younger set. Charlie has two passions—clothes and Phyllis—and both come near ruining him.

For the most part the direction is very good. There are one or two places where the interests threaten to slacken but generally speaking this isn’t noticeable enough to worry about. Many little things, well done, are bound to meet with approval. For instance, hero Charlie has practically mortgaged his soul to buy a dress suit and in the midst of his anticipated debut in it, he drops the silk hat and his genuine fright at the headgear’s near destruction is great. There is another good bit when, all dressed up, he tries to “sneak” out to the dance but his uncle is standing guard at the foot of the stairs. His various ruses to dislodge the uncle from the guard post are really funny.

When Phyllis’ uncle gets inquisitive as to how much Charlie makes a week he says $18 very bodily but the scant sum is such a shock the uncle asks him to repeat it. This time, a wiggly $18 on the screen indicates hero’s courage is weakening. Many similar bits all register effectively.

Charlie is just a poor clerk working for $18 a week which isn’t enough to even pay the war tax on the two greatest things in life for him—Phyllis and “snappy” clothes. Jimmie Long, a rich fellow with a car, is also in love with Phyllis and it’s this awful circumstance that causes Charlie so much worry.

At a dance Charlie asks Phyllis to marry him. She says they are too young but they agree to become engaged. Then comes a shock. Charlie has no ring and the one Phyllis selects costs $500. He pays a deposit on it. Then hero decides to startle the town and appear in a dress suit. This he does and figures he should be out of debt by 1940. In the meantime Jimmy has paid cash for the ring and intends giving it to Phyllis.

In the same meantime Charlie hits upon a way to pay his bills. All he has to do is capture the burglar who is cleaning up the town and claim $1000 reward. How Charlie accidentally lands the burglar, gets the thousand and wins the girl is for you to see.

Say the Star is a Small Town Beau Brummel in this One

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

In announcing Ray’s next attraction “Nineteen and Phyllis” be sure to tell them they’re going to see him in a role a little different than those he has had most recently. Instead of his customary country boy clothes, he’s a regular “slicker”—white flannels, sport shoes, cane, ‘n everything. You can make promises for the comedy business contained in it and tell them not to miss seeing Ray as a “dandy” in “Nineteen and Phyllis.”

You can tell them it’s a story of puppy love and if you want to give an idea of the story catchlines should help you out. You shouldn’t have to work to get them in to see this. Mention of the star’s name should be sufficient. You might say that Clara Horton plays opposite in this. Charlie’s sure to make the young girls’ hearts tingle when they see him dance like a regular Princeton stepper. Stills can be used advantageously.

Lois Weber is credited with the authorship of "To Please One Woman," although the screen caption acknowledges the idea was conceived from a story by Marion Orth. At any rate the real story of the selfish woman contains little very new. There are the usual familiar characters all obviously labeled as to their respective parts in the plot, but despite this, Lois Weber has made a picture attractive to the eye.

The backgrounds in every scene provide splendid atmosphere and then too there are some effective touches that help make up for the story's shortcomings. For instance, there's the silly young girl who decides to elope with the first grown man that smiles at her and who wants to smoke cigarettes like the "selfish" woman. There's also a bit of pathos toward the end when the little boy dies as a result of the woman's whim.

Claire Windsor as the grown-up sister represents a wholesome type of girlhood, while Edith Kessler is the silly young sister. Edward Burns is the handsome young doctor and L. C. Shumway "the other man" in the case. All these players do very good work. Mona Lisa plays the part of the "selfish woman" and her acting is about the weakest thing in the picture. Her work is forced and she never misses an opportunity to take advantage of the boudoir set to display the latest in decollette.

Alice Granville is very happy in her love for Dr. Ransome, until she has reason to believe that his visits to the mansion known as the "mystery house" are other than professional. Leila, the mistress of the mansion, is the woman whom her husband cannot please and so she lives alone in the big house and having taken a fancy for the handsome young doctor she finds it convenient to be ill quite often. The doctor makes his visits frequently, but it is not until after Alice refuses to have anything further to do with him that he succumbs to the "vamp."

Lucien Wainwright, another admirer of Leila, arrives aboard his yacht in answer to Leila's urgent telegram. He, however, interests himself in Alice whom he meets and although they are friendly Alice can't forget her old sweetheart. Alice's small brother Bobbie is seriously ill as a result of running for Dr. Ransome when Leila's phone message said she was dying and needed him at once.

The boy dies and that same night Leila's husband arrives at the mansion and kills himself. Then Leila begs Wainwright to take her away with him but he calmly admits that he has "lost his taste for her," whereupon, she exits from the story to parts unknown and after a time Alice and the doctor have a reconciliation.

Use the Producer's Name and Say the Picture is Good to Look At

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

In announcing the showing of Lois Weber's latest production "To Please One Woman," it will probably be better to confine your promises to the production. Tell them Miss Weber has provided an attractive atmosphere for her story and that there are many beautiful backgrounds in the picture. You can talk about the character of the sweet young girl, her romance with the doctor. It might attract to mention the silly little girl who wanted to smoke cigarettes like the mistress of the "mystery house."

This is Lois Weber's first release for Paramount and you can talk about her as being the most important woman director in the business. Catchlines could be used of her understanding of women and her treatment of a theme wherein women are concerned with a full appreciation and understanding of a woman's viewpoint.

CHARACTER OF STORY......American saves his sweetheart from Spanish revolutionists

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... 5,827 feet

The main trouble with "Rogues and Romance," is that a weak plot, shy on incident, has been padded through a lot of footage to make it cover the distance for a six reel feature. The story is much too slow in getting started, and nothing particularly interesting happens until the middle of the third reel.

Material leading up to the only important happening in the picture, is spread out through these two and a half reels, when it could very easily be told in one. For that reason an audience may be pretty well discouraged by the time the action starts.

In the last half of the picture things move rapidly, and there are a couple of good hand to hand fights, and a well done skirmish between Spanish soldiers and revolutionists.

The direction, with the exception of this last scene is only fair. It would have been possible to make a much more interesting picture in spite of the fact that the material lacks, by elaborating more skillfully on the bare plot.

The players are all adequate, but Mr. Seitz and Miss Caprice do not have their ability taxed in the least. There isn't enough to either character to bring out much acting.

The action takes place in Spain, where Sylvia, an American girl, is infatuated with Pedro Pezet, a brigand, and leader of the Spanish revolutionists. She is engaged to Reginald Harding, an American, but when he arrives the girl breaks the engagement.

The day of the review of the troops by the governor is chosen by Pezet as the moment for bringing the revolution to a head, but his plans are ruined by Carmelita, a Spanish dancing girl, who is in love with the bandit chief, and who now betrays him because of his attentions to the American girl.

Reggie unwittingly helps Pezet escape to the hills. There they find Sylvia, who claims Pezet as the man she loves, and is going to marry. Pezet takes the girl to the revolutionist headquarters, where it develops that he is merely holding her captive for ransom from her wealthy father.

Reggie follows closely, and bluffs and fights his way through the guards to the now penitent Sylvia. He has a single handed fight with most of the revolutionary army, and he and Sylvia are saved in the nick of time by the Spanish soldiers.

Stars May Draw Some But Go Slow On Promises

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You can't afford to make any large statements about this. You can use the names of George Seitz and June Caprice to advantage, particularly if their work in serials has been popular in your neighborhood. You can also feature the fact that part of the picture was made in Spain, and talk about the thrills in the fight between the revolutionists and the government soldiers.

The best thing to do, however, if you show this, is to ease it by quietly. Let the title and the names of the stars get them in.

CHARACTER OF STORY......Young widow in-

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... 5,536 feet

Billie Burke’s latest doesn’t come up to the satisfaction mark of the productions being turned out by this company. In the first place the story is really worth about two reels for it certainly doesn’t contain enough material for the footage accorded it. And so “The Frisky Mrs. Johnson” turns out to be a long series of scenes of which about half contain no action at all.
The action is supposedly laid in France, but there is nothing to indicate it except that the art titles consist of various familiar French scenes. There are no exterior shots which makes it difficult at times to know just where the characters are and in whose home. There are two homes in which the story takes place but as the players are never seen going or coming, it’s hard to tell just what’s what.

There is one set supposed to be a street scene but everyone will know it’s studio stuff. Billie Burke is pleasing in herself, but she has so little opportunity in the role of Mrs. Johnson that even her appearance doesn’t help this very poor story. There is some nonsense provided by the character of a French admirer of the widow who flies around getting her powder puffs, etc., but doesn’t add any entertainment to the producton.

Mrs. Johnson is credited with being a frisky widow although as far as the audience is concerned, she does-
’t seem to have more than an ordinary amount of “frisk.” Mrs. Johnson has a married sister who is unhappy and is carrying on a love affair with Sir Lionel Heathcote, while Mrs. Johnson does her best to keep the two apart because she fears for her sister’s reputation.

Frank Morley, a brother of the sister’s husband returns and having loved Mrs. Johnson before her marriage, it doesn’t take him long to fall for her again and they plan to elope. At the same time the sister is planning to run away with Heathcote and a note sent to her is found by her husband who follows his wife to Heathcote’s apartment. But in the meantime, Mrs. Johnson has heard of her sister’s intention and reaches Heathcote’s apartment before her brother-in-law.

Mrs. Johnson makes it appear that the note was intended for her and so she saves her sister, but when Frank hears of the affair he will have nothing to do with her. But eventually the sister decides that she cannot let the widow sacrifice her happiness for her so she tells her husband the truth, Frank goes back to Mrs. Johnson and the sister decides to divorce her husband and marry Heathcote.

If the Star Is Well Liked It May Get By

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This is a very weak one, but if Billie Burke is popular with your patrons perhaps her appearance will satisfy them, although she has been provided with a very weak story in “The Frisky Mrs. Johnson.” It wouldn’t be well to do any promising in connection with the picture so you might confine your announcement to catchlines such as: “If you had a sister who was risking her reputation would you sacrifice your own happiness to save her?” Or, “She was called ‘Frisky Mrs. Johnson’ but see how she nearly lost her lover in an effort to save her sister’s reputation.”

Perhaps the fact that Clyde Fitch is the author may interest them so you might mention it. The supporting cast doesn’t contain any particularly well-known names so confine your names to the star’s.

My dear Sidney:

Just a few words in regard to the way in which I have put over the Maurice Tourneur production, "The Last of the Mohicans".

First allow me to thank you for writing our Superintendent of schools here and for sending me a copy of your letter to him. That gave me a "lead off" and if you don't think I took advantage of it you should have seen my business on the opening, yesterday. Also allow me to thank you for sending me the print three days in advance so that I could get an advance showing.

When the print arrived I got busy and phoned the leaders of the following: The Ministerial Alliance, Women's Club, Y.W.C.A., Y.M.C.A. Schools, City Officials, Board of Education, Public Library and St. Victor's College. They all responded at the private showing and when the picture had finished I merely handed them the enclosed card which I had printed for the occasion. Within twenty four hours they all had returned their cards with this opinion written on it. That was all I needed-- I went from there! Heavy on the newspapers, my screen and lobby. The results were wonderful.

Friendly competitors told me to lay off of 'Last of the Mohicans', in fact I was skeptical myself but I knew from criticisms that the production was there and also knew if I could get the folks interested in the education of the community boys, that the picture would please and believe me, Sidney, that's the answer! It did please them and it pleased the kids that crave "INJUN PITCHERS" too.

Show this letter to exhibitors and they can use the same ideas and clean up the same as I have. Much success to you.

Sincerely,

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... 4,782 feet

In "Hearts Up," Harry Carey's latest Universal production, the cowboy star is seen in a role with less of the cowboy trimmings' and for the sake of variety alone, the offering is a pleasing diversion from the type of picture in which this star is usually seen.

Carey is credited with writing the story so it must be that he doesn't aim to confine his efforts altogether to the sombrero and saddle.

The story has a real human interest appeal and the production end of it has been really well taken care of by Val Paul, who has injected many very fine touches.

Some scenes taken aboard a moving train are good and there's a splendid fire scene. In this bit there is a very effective bit of photography in the way of a double exposure. Carey has just rescued from the burning building, a man who had once saved his life. The double exposure shows the man saving Carey from drowning.

There is just one thing that may be criticised and that is the fact that it isn't quite comprehensive that a man as old as the hero is supposed to be, would be in love with a child such as played by Mignonne

Golden. The lady is pleasing but a little older looking girl would have made Carey's falling in love much more plausible.

Jim Drew, a squaw man, receives word that his wife whom he had long before deserted, has died and that his daughter is coming to live with him. But before the girl arrives Drew is injured when his cabin is burned and dies just as David Brent (Carey), arrives to pay back a debt of gratitude. He has the girl's letter saying she will meet her father in San Francisco.

Thinking to repay his dead friend, Brent decides to meet the girl and tell her her father is dead. But Lorelei believes Carey is her father and she is so happy with her beautiful home and the kindness of Brent, that he can't bring himself to tell her the truth.

On the train Lorelei had met Gordon Swayne, a surveyor, whose friendship she retains and Brent, realizing he loves Lorelei is unhappy.

Eventually Gordon learns that Brent is not Lorelei's father and he threatens the ranchman, 'Finally when Lorelei learns the truth Brent decides to go away and leave the girl mistress of his home.' Lorelei stops him and tells him she loves him only.

Should Give General Satisfaction Especially to Carey Fans

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

If you have Harry Carey fans among your clientele be sure to get this for them. It shows the star in a role somewhat different from that in which they are accustomed to seeing him and it gives him a chance to show what he can do minus the sombrero and other cowboy paraphernalia. You can talk about the human interest theme, tell them how the star plays "Daddy"
to a little girl although he loves her as a woman.

Say that Carey also wrote the story. That should interest them. Val Paul deserves mention for his splendid direction and you can link up the title with catchlines effectively. "If a little orphan girl was happy in the thought that you were her father, would you tell her the truth?" Or, "She loved him as a father, but he loved her as a woman. See how it worked out in 'Hearts Up,' Harry Carey's latest Universal production."

CHARACTER OF STORY....... Cowboy captures

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION..... About 5,000 feet

Buck Jones makes a good type of cowboy hero, and his personality and the work of Carol Holloway as the fiery little mountain girl, put over an otherwise very ordinary western. There is plenty of gunplay by everyone in the cast, and that’s what most Western fans want. The story in its main plot is the regulation theme of the good Westerner who defeats all the bad Westerners, but some unusual twists have been given here and there which help for some originality.

It has been well directed, the fight scenes, both fist and gun, being especially good. The action is fast and runs smoothly, and on the whole it makes very fair entertainment for lovers of Westerns. The scenes between Bill Blunt and Hilma are especially good, and Carol Holloway does an intelligent and spirited characterization of Hilma.

The story is laid in the time when the cattlemen and the sheep herders of the West were continually at swords points, for control of the grazing lands.
Bill Blunt (Buck Jones), on a tour of inspection for the cattlemen whose interests he protects, finds some steers in the corral of Old Man Ring, a sheep herder.
Hilma Ring, his daughter hates everything pertaining to cattle, and tries to shoot Bill. Old man Ring is murdered by the mysterious “Killer,” thought to be employed by the cattlemen. Zang Whistler then tries to carry off Hilma. Bill appears on the scene to arrest Zang for cattle rustling, and Zang and Hilma escape after wounding Bill. The “Killer” is captured and brought to jail by Zang and Hilma, where he confesses that he was employed by the cattlemen to clean out the sheep herders. The sheep men storm the jail for the killer, and the cattlemen for Zang.
The latter and Hilma escape but are pursued and captured by Bill. Barricaded in a cabin Bill holds out against the whole gang of cattle rustlers, and when he is wounded Hilma rushes to his aid. Zang drags her to the door but she breaks away, barricades herself inside and soon discovers that she is in love with Bill, whom she had hated and attempted to kill.

Boost the Star and Promise Them Lots of Shooting

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The best bet on this one is to appeal strongly to the lovers of biff-bang gun play. You can promise them as much of that as you wish. If Buck Jones is popular with your patrons you can assure them a good performance by the star. If you talk about the story, play up the feature of the mysterious “Killer” who terrorized the district with his murders. Also tell them it is the story of the taming of a fiery little Western “shrew.” Your best points are the star and the thrills, because of the lack of originality in the theme. If you want catch lines you can say: “See how the girl tried to kill Bill Blunt, and then married him, in ‘Two Moons.’”

In “Her Beloved Villain,” Wanda Hawley has been given an adaptation of the French play “La Veglione,” by Bisson and Carre, and while the production provides good entertainment, it is not overly due to the work of the star. The picture starts out as straight drama, but quickly assumes all the earmarks of a farce. It is an amusing farce too, with enough variation from the standard one or two plots common to this type of picture, to make the theme novel. Although Miss Hawley offers one or two bits of real comedy, she is somewhat thrust into the background by Tully Marshall, who easily dominates the piece, with a very amusing performance. The director has pretty well exhausted the comedy of the original, developing each situation to the fullest extent. The balance of the cast including, Templer Powell, Ramsey Wallace, and Lillian Leighton, all fit in well.

The scene of the story is laid in France. Louis Martinot is in love with Susanne Bergomat (Wanda Hawley), and upon being hastily summoned to America, requests his friend Dr. Blythe, to investigate her family, and report. Blythe, falling in love with the girl himself, reports that her father is a drunkard and her mother a cabaret singer; and then marries her himself. Martinot appears sometime later, ignorant of Blythe’s marriage, and Blythe is at a loss as to how he can keep his wife and Martinot apart. Blythe persuades his partner, Dr. Poulard (Tully Marshall), to take Susanne to her mother in a neighboring town. Instead of going home Susanne drags the erstwhile staid doctor to the carnival at Nice, where he shows his first excessive liking for champagne. Their arrival home the next morning discloses the fact that they have not been to “mother’s,” resulting in near tragic domestic trouble in both families. Affairs are finally untangled when Dr. Blythe confesses that he deceived Martinot, and Susanne in turn confesses that her escape was only to teach her husband a lesson. Martinot gracefully accepts the situation, and Susanne’s parents are convinced that no one thinks they are drunkards, and the whole party joyfully celebrates the Blythes’ first wedding anniversary.

Promise Them a Clever French Farce and Use Star’s Name

Notwithstanding that Wanda Hawley’s is not the best performance in the production, you can use her name to advantage. You can also use Tully Marshall, commenting on the comedy merit of his work, as his ability has been widely demonstrated. Play up the fact that this is a real French farce.

Don’t fail to emphasize the novelty of its situations, and the abundance of humor in each. You can make good use of the title in teasers and you can build innumerable catch lines about it. The theme of the picture offers many possibilities for a catchy and amusing exploitation. Catch lines on this order might be used: “One man told the other that her parents were drunkards—and then married her himself. See what happened then in “Her Beloved Villain.”
Unique and Strongly Dramatic From Plot Angle

"MR. WU" is undoubtedly one of the strongest dramatic stories ever presented on either the screen or stage, and as such is entitled to all the praise that it received when used as a stage starring vehicle for Walker Whiteside some years ago.

As a picture, however, it runs rather contrary to the rule in that its villain has the most important role and its love story ends, unhappily too, in the early reels. After this the story is one of Chinese revenge, unique, logical and carefully built, a revenge that fails only because fate decrees that "Mr. Wu" drink the poisoned tea instead of the woman on whom the crafty Oriental had planned to wreak his vengeance.

Sumptuous sets showing the interior of "Mr. Wu's" Chinese home, beautiful scenic locations and a careful attention to detail add to the dramatic qualities the feature possesses. Matheson Lang plays "Wu" with extreme skill. He is supported by a competent cast with which no fault can be found unless it is that most of them who play Chinese characters are not especially good types for Oriental roles.

It is, however, in the actual plot that "Mr. Wu" possesses greatest strength. For audiences which appreciate the unusual, the something different, the picture should prove a hit. Those who insist on the sugar coated live happy after offering will probably object to its lack of romance and its reversal of motion picture tradition. Therefore, the subject of whether or not it should be booked resolves itself into an individual problem to be decided by the audience which each exhibitor may have.

Stoll Film Corporation's First Offering a Screen Version of Cosmo Hamilton's "Duke's Son" in Six Reels

Reviewed by Epes W. Sargeant

Interesting, from many angles, is the first offering of the Stoll Film Corporation, which is about to enter the American market with a weekly release. This is the first endeavor of the British producers to make a regular release since the days when Pathe, Urban and Gaumont were components of the old Motion Picture Patents Company, and the first offering naturally interests quite apart from its entertainment value.

In point of acting, the production compares very favorably with the work of the American companies. Ivy Duke, the starred player, and Guy Newall, her featured support, are but two of a cast of unusual excellence. Hugh C. Buckler and C. Lawford Davidson also show prominently and the lesser members of the cast are all competent. They are good judges of tempo, are excellent in the pantomimic registration of their thoughts and they look the parts they play.

Technically the production shows imperfections of lighting and some of the settings are cramped, though others, apart from the lack of illumination, will compare very favorably with the best in cinematographic architecture, notably the ballroom scenes near the close of the picture and the earlier hallway of an old castle at which the players are guests. In the matter of exteriors a different story may be told, for there is a fine country seat and some shots of a Thames houseboat with a natural background of unusual beauty.

The story is primarily propaganda for and a defense of the younger sons of titled families. This is a matter which does not concern American audiences, but the natural narrative value of the story, apart from this propaganda, is decidedly good and the sincerity of the players adds interest apart from the work of the author. There are one or two uncovered time jumps, but the continuity is kept well in hand, and the interest sustained past the climax. If succeeding subjects are equal in value to the first offering, the long-threatened English invasion should become a successful fact; not that the presentation equals in all respects the best of our native work, but because it stands up well and offers variety in stars and treatment.

DIRECTION..... Only fair; sometimes very amateurish
PHOTOGRAPHY .................. All right
LIGHTINGS .................. Usually good
CAMERA WORK .................. Average
STAR..... Sincere in her effort, but handicapped greatly by “suffering” role

DETAIL .................. Not always good CHARACTER OF STORY.... Heroine who suffers imprisonment to save her brother, whom she believes guilty of murder
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION..... About 6,000 feet

This new offering on the state rights market will probably get over in a fairly satisfactory way because of some rather effective suspense which is injected from time to time. But taken from a standpoint of production, the picture is quite amateurish. The direction at times is very bad and a continuity that jumps the action and the players all over the place has been provided, perhaps in the thought of getting the desired suspense.

In the first place the heroine sets out to ask a loan from her grandfather who had cast her mother out of his life. The mother is supposed to be dying, but the daughter goes for the money, is accused of murder and apparently is some time in jail before a telegram announces the mother’s death. Again, there is a character mentioned named Frank, the titles keep referring to “Frank,” but it isn’t until practically the last reel until the character makes his appearance, then a title says he’s been in Europe. Why not have said so in the first place? The picture’s main fault is extremely badly written titles of which there are twice as many as there should be. Re-titling would be the biggest help the picture could be given.

Miss Hyland is sincere as the heroine, but is handicapped by a role that calls for nothing but gloom. A little sunshine here and there would be a happy relief to the star’s long suffering. Campbell Gullan, who plays the old grandfather, wears a very poor “old man” makeup. Tom Chatterton is the leading male character, who does what is required of him.

Beryl Brentano is accused of the murder of her grandfather whom she visited to borrow money for her dying mother. The girl can prove her own innocence but fearing that her wayward brother may have killed the old man she refuses to say the word and goes to jail. Lennox, the district attorney, presses the case against the girl, but soon is convinced of her innocence and her devotion to the one she is shielding. He is left in a sorry plight when he realizes that the hero’s true love is his sister, who is now a priest. Eventually the brother proves that he did go to his grandfather’s home the night of the murder, but while he was there a storm broke and the old man was killed by lightning.

Star’s Name and Some Good Suspense Can Be Talked About
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

As a state rights offering of average calibre you can probably book “The Price of Silence” and give fair satisfaction. If, however, your audience is accustomed to the better grade program or special release production they will not be satisfied with this one. Your talking point will be with regard to the suspense created as to the real murderer of the old man.

It may be that Peggy Hyland still has a following among your patrons, in which case make good use of her name and tell them something about the story. You could use the line: “If you were accused of murder and you had promised your dying mother to shield your weakling brother, would you accept the blame if you thought him guilty?”

Madge Kennedy in "The Girl with the Jazz Heart" seems to have been a long time on the Goldwyn release schedule but now that it's here, it's a really very pleasant picture and satisfies despite it's being about one reel shorter than the usual feature length. But better quality than quantity, and that's just what happens here. Evidently the picture was originally much longer, but whoever took the scissors to it knew how to do it and with the assistance of the title writer "The Girl With the Jazz Heart" comes through the operation successfully.

And Madge Kennedy—well, she's her usual charming self and even a little more charming. Her individuality is sure to appeal. She takes the part of a gum chewing, jazz loving telephone operator and also that of the quiet Quaker girl who comes to the city to meet her husband-to-be. Miss Kennedy handles this former part so well that she should be given more opportunities like this.

The camera work in this is really great. The double exposures are perhaps some of the best yet seen and where a double is used for the star it is so well done that it's almost remarkable.

Miriam Smith, Quaker girl, is being forced into a marriage by her uncle who fears she might squander her fortune, so he arranges her marriage to a country swain. Miriam answers an ad in a matrimonial paper and later goes to New York to meet her husband-to-be. At the hotel she weakens and takes the telephone girl Kitty, into her confidence. Kitty thinks it a "swell" chance to grab herself a man so she agrees to change places with Miriam.

The husband-to-be arrives and there is a mutual disappointment. Miriam really likes him and he doesn't like Kitty and her common ways. However, Miriam decides to go through with the deception and the three go to a cabaret, Kitty dressed in pretty clothes Miriam had bought to meet the man. Kitty does the ordering and superintends the party generally.

Then she gets into trouble by dancing with a professional dancer. His wife objects. After this argument is settled, a detective arrives and demands that Miriam Smith return to her home. Then the truth comes out, and Miriam is escorted back to her Pennsylvania home where her uncle resumes plans for her immediate marriage. That night, however, the former husband-to-be arrives to claim his bride and they live happy, etc.

A Jazz Campaign Ought to Get This Over Big
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Madge Kennedy is a favorite in a number of theaters, and even though she doesn't appear at great frequency, that should be all the more reason for them to want to see her when she does. "The Girl With a Jazz Heart" touches a rather incurable sentiment of the present day generation so the title should attract them.

Tell them some of the scenes show the lobby of the Hotel Belmont in New York and then another shot taken in a well known New York cabaret and that part of the show is in the picture. Gilda Gray, the shimmy dancer, performs under a spot light and incidentally there is a very good effect here. The actual colors have been put in the film. Catchlines should get them. Say "Want to learn New York's latest dance steps. Let 'The Girl With the Jazz Heart' show you. Madge Kennedy in her most recent Goldwyn picture is at the blank theater."

DIRECTOR ......................... Maurice Elvey
AUTHOR ............................ Ethel M. Dell
CAMERAMAN ........................ Sinclair Hill
SCENARIO BY ....................... Paul Burger

AS A WHOLE......Carefully made production, splendid atmosphere in settings. Well acted, but a somewhat time worn theme

STORY......English novel adaptation providing good but not new screen material

DIRECTION......Especially good as regards settings and detail

PHOTOGRAPHY ........................ Good
LIGHTINGS ............................ All right CAMERA WORK ........................ Satisfactory
PLAYERS......Mary Glynne, Sidney Seaward, and Dennis Terry handle principal parts effectively

EXTERIORS ................. Good race scenes
INTERIORS ......................... Carefully done

DETAIL .............................. Nothing lacking

CHARACTER OF STORY......Struggle of English nobleman and his groom for the love of a girl nobly born

Mary Glynne, as the haughty patrician girl, gives a very intelligent portrayal, and keeps her audience in doubt as to whether she will hold out against the love protestations of the villainous Lord Saltash up to the very moment when one would expect her to decide for the right. Sidney Seaward, as her “common” husband has the full sympathy of the spectator, and makes of the part a strong and forceful character. Dennis Terry, who is a son of the famous Ellen Terry, is convincing as Lord Saltash, but he is a trifle light for a plotting villain. However, he is a good actor.

The fault that some audiences will probably find is that the picture reminds them of others they have seen, because the general idea is one that has been the subject of many stories.

Jack Bolton is the genius of the racing stable of Lord Saltash. He falls in love with Maud Brian, daughter of Lady Bernard Brian, who is married to an inn keeper, Giles Sheppard.

Maud realizes Bolton’s love for her but she is half in love with Lord Saltash of Burchester Castle, and she does not love Bolton.

The brutality of Giles Sheppard to Bunny, her little crippled brother, makes her hesitate. She contemplates marrying Bolton to protect her brother, and then Bolton takes “the hundredth chance,” and asks her to marry him for Bunny’s sake hoping love will come later. Maud marries him and then Saltash, desiring his trainer’s wife, tries to entice her from her husband. He traps her in his castle and tries to compromise her.

The same day Saltash’s horse, “The Hundredth Chance” wins a big race, and Bolton a fortune. That day Bolton, too, wins his wife’s love by his trust of her in the apparently damming circumstances created by Saltash. The villainous lord receives a beating from the husband, and Maud, who has been his wife in name only, becomes his wife in fact.

Use Title and Horse Race Angle, Promise a Fine Production

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

“The Hundredth Chance” offers in its title an alluring and interest commanding phrase, and presents a number of possibilities for exploitation. Linked up with the horse racing feature of the picture it gives promise of excitement and a “long shot” which carries an appeal to nearly everybody. Play up these two points as the big features in your advertising.

You can also safely promise a really fine production. Comment on the excellent atmosphere and the care with which the settings have been made. The fact that Ellen Terry’s son plays one of the principal parts might prove an attraction to some. For a catch line you can use: “The battle of a nobleman and a groom for the love of a girl.”

CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Girl forced to mas-

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... About 5'000 feet

Blanche Sweet's latest production made by Jesse D.
Hampton offers a first rate program attraction if for nothing but its scenic beauty. In fact the director's main attention seems to have been given over to the selection of locations but in this at least he has certainly been successful. Practically the entire action is in the out-of-doors and there are a continuous series of shots of mountain country that will run some of the nature scenics a close second.

The story which has been adapted from the novel by Marah Ellis Ryan provides attractive roles for the principals but other than that it doesn't boast of unusual strength. It is a western of the dance hall—gold rush type with its sequences rather loosely con-ected, and its situations based on rather weak and un-convincing circumstances. For instance Hamilton takes the little girl from the Indians because it isn't good for her to be with them and evidently he provides for her thereafter although he has no reason for doing so except that perhaps he has fallen in love with her. But they fail to have him indicate the fact to a very great extent.

The camera work and photography generally is a big thing in "That Girl Montana." And Lucien An-driot, the cameraman, deserves a good share of the credit for any success that the picture may attain.

Montana Rivers finally escapes from her father who had forced her to wear boy's clothing and aid him in his robbing and cheating. The girl is taken in by friendly Indians who allow her to remain in their camp until Akkomi, the chief, asks his white friend Dan Overton to take the girl away because it is not good for her to remain in the Indian camp.

Dan provides for Tana and falls in love with her but because of her past life the girl keeps him at a distance. Then comes Jim Harris who recognizes Tana as the boy robber and when he attempts to blacken her past Dan gives him a beating which paralyses him. Jim stays on with Dan who regrets his hastiness. Eventually Tana's father again appears and demands that the girl go away with him. She refuses but also hesitates to tell Dan of her trouble.

In the meantime Jim has waited to avenge himself against Tana's father because long ago he had run away with his wife and baby. So when the outlaw came, Jim, whose arms were still strong, strangled
the man and then told Tana that she was his daughter, the child of the wife whom the outlaw had run away with. Then the clinch between Dan and Tana.

Catchlines and Stills in the Lobby Will Attract

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

If you are looking for a satisfactory program picture with an attractive atmosphere and one that's good to look at because of its scenery, then "That Girl Montana" will fit in nicely. The story is an adequate one of its kind and the fact that some things in it aren't quite convincing perhaps won't make a great deal of difference. There is some good fight stuff that will attract and it's several good bits help cover up the bad.

Play up the star's name and show some stills of her in boy's clothes. You can also use Mahlon Hamilton's name to good advantage. Should you want to make known the character of the story you could say something about the gold rush days in Montana or you can go after it from the other angle—that of a girl who was forced to dress as a boy and become a robber.

Universal has taken a time worn story and through the efforts of the director and those in charge of the production generally, has come through with a program picture, that while not “big” offers satisfaction through its production value. There is some very good water stuff and the usual desert island ingredients—all very well done.

Use the Star’s Name and Tell Them About the Desert Island Action

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You can book this picture and most likely give adequate satisfaction with it. The production provided helps in no small way to cover up the familiar situations which comprise this story adapted from George Rix’s “Out of the Sunset.” Talk about the production and tell them there are many interesting bits that take place on the island.

You might also mention some very good night stuff. It is really very good. Use the name of the new Universal star and you can attract with catchlines such as: “If you believed your husband dead and returned to your home with a new found love and then was greeted by a husband who had never respected you and was now a cripple, what would you do? That is the situation faced by Eva Novak in ‘The Torrent,’ her latest Universal picture.”

The Motion Picture Industry is essentially “of the people”—or of the masses. Figuring only in the most practical and sordid way, it would be good business for the motion picture industry to spend Ten Dollars to save the life of any child. The per capita expenditure for motion pictures these days is a lot higher than Ten Dollars in seventy years, the normal lifetime.

In a higher plane, what industry owes more to the people—and to the children? It’s the genuine heart-tug between motion pictures and the people that has resulted in the tremendous development of our business. We’re the people’s dearest friend—it’s their right to come to us for help.

And from still another angle—and you motion picture folks everywhere ought to give this a lot of thought:—The time is at hand when the motion picture industry ought to welcome any opportunity to prove its tremendous strength, either for public welfare or for its own protection.

Some Short Reels

“The Saddle King”—Universal
Type of production...........................................2 reel Western

Ed. (Hoot) Gibson is starred in this. It is a very conventional Western story, with a villainous ranch foreman, cowboy hero and plot to steal the pay roll, but it is pretty good entertainment nevertheless. Gibson does some very creditable rough riding, and the action moves along at a good clip. The story is about a roving cowboy who gets a job “busing” bronchos on a ranch where lives a beautiful girl. He succeeds in riding a horse that no one else can master, thus winning the admiration of the girl. The foreman is in league with a gang of cattle rustlers, one of them confesses, and the foreman is about to steal the ranch payroll and decamp when caught by Gibson. There is nothing original in the development, but for a short offering it is all right. The western atmosphere is good, Gibson has a pleasing personality, and it should go over where they like this type of picture.

“His Day of Rest”—Universal
Type of production...........................................1 reel comedy

Joe Martin, the trained Chimpanzee is the featured performer of this, and the monk gets a lot of laughs out of the reel. He pulls some remarkably human stunts and his antics are bound to be amusing to almost any audience. The picture, supposedly shows Joe enjoying a day of rest from his labors in the pictures. He escorts a couple of youngsters around Universal City, performing the duties of a first class nurse maid. There isn’t much to the picture besides Joe, but he keeps it going, and makes it an entertaining reel.

“Pals And Papas”—Chester-Educational
Type of production...........................................1 reel scenic

The cameraman has gone into the South sea for these views, and some very interesting glimpses of the Maori tribes, inhabitants of New Zealand, are the result. The reel starts off with a journey up one of the principal rivers of New Zealand, displaying the thick tropical vegetation of the country, and making an artistic bit of footage. Arriving several miles up the stream, the spectator finds himself outside the walls of a Maori village. The natives are then shown in all the occupations common to their everyday life. The carving of wooden images is shown, several grotesque and interesting native dances, of which the strangest is the Poi dance, executed by the women. The tribe has performed for the camera, showing their method of meeting an attack. The facial contortions which the natives go through to work themselves into a rage, are highly amusing. It is a very good reel from start to finish, and will make a first class scenic number. The titles are by William Henry Wright.

“Fresh from the Country”—Universal
Type of production...........................................1 reel comedy

This is a fairly funny situation comedy, featuring Dorothy Wolfert and a little curly haired kid. There are no really big laughs in it, but it gets over pretty well on continuous mild amusement. Miss Wolfert presents a sufficiently terrible appearance to make it humorous to consider her as a bride, and the little kid is cute and amusing. The plot is about a country cousin who comes to town and falls, in love with a wealthy man; a fond mother has selected for her daughter. Daughter has a sweetie of her own choice, and they cook up a scheme whereby they all disguise themselves double wedding, and everybody is happy except mother. It runs along pretty fast.

“His Four Fathers”—Educational
Type of production..............................1 reel comedy

This is one of the series released under the Vanity brand, featuring Neal Burns, Irene Dalton, and Laura LaPlante. A good comedy situation has been chosen for the basis of the reel and Burns and the two young ladies do fairly good work in extracting the humor of it. No big laughs, but it’s a little better than average amusement all the way through. The girl’s father an insulting letter and the latter kicks the boy out talent. The story is about a young man who loves the daughter of his father’s enemy. The boy’s father sends the girl’s father an insulting letter and the latter kicks the boy out until his father shall apologize. The comedy results when the girl’s chum and the boy both disguise as the boy’s father and comes to apologise. It’s a fast reel and will prove a satisfactory filler.

“A Desperate Tenderfoot”—C. B. C. Film Corp.
Type of production..............................2 reel western

This is a Star Ranch brand offering without any featured performers, and presenting two reels of just fair entertainment of the typical western type. There is an air of mystery created by the question of who the tenderfoot is, that adds something in keeping interest alive, but the stereotyped plot prevents considering it anything more than average. However, if your audiences are western fans you can probably get it across, as there is quite a lot of shooting, a villainous train robber, and except for a slow start, the action is speedy. The story is about a mysterious tenderfoot who comes into the town of “Pot Luck,” where the heroine runs the saloon and gambling hall. He is picked on by all the “hard guys” and appears very timid, thus disgusting the girl. After getting into a poker game with the train robber gang, it turns out that he is a government detective. He catches the gang and wins the girl.

“Christmas Thoughts”—Goldwyn
Type of production..............................1 reel magazine

Some very worth while Christmas thoughts are brought out in this number of the Ford series, which make it a very timely and bright reel that should find a spot on many Christmas bills. The “Good Fellows” club of any city is shown convening the night before Christmas, talking over the most enjoyable way to spend Christmas day. They arrange to meet Christmas morning at a charitable institution, and there they secure the names of numbers of poor families. The balance of the reel then shows the unlimited joy they bring to homes where Christmas day would otherwise have been empty. One of the “Good Fellows” is seen bringing a heaping basket of provisions and gifts to a starving family, and the happiness he creates is well told in the picture. It fulfills its purpose nicely, and will not be amiss on any program during the Christmas season.

“Roll Your Own”—Goldwyn
Type of production..............................1 reel animated cartoon

This is the funniest Happy Hooligan reel in some time, although quite short. Happy is in Mexico painting signs, and he falls for a senorita whose father runs the bull fights. The bull dies before the performance, and Happy takes his place, disguised in a cow hide. He vanquishes the tough bull fighter and wins the senorita. There are more than the average number of laughs in this one, and it will make a good filler where a cartoon is wanted.
Short Reels

Type of production...............................2 reel comedy

This is a Hallroom Boys comedy with Hugh Fay and Harry McCoy as Percy and Ferdie. Polly Moran is also featured in the cast. There isn't much good stuff in this one, and the laughs are so few and the action so obvious that it falls flat except in a small portion of the footage in the second reel. The boys are seen at their start, in their hall bedroom, from which they have difficulty in escaping, on account of the watchful landlady. Finally making their getaway, they ruin their clothing and are chased by a bull immediately and the apparel of a shining minister and his companion, who are in swimming. The two boys follow directions of a letter in the pockets, and call on a wealthy young lady who is desirous of learning the shrinny. There is some fair business in this part of the piece, but it doesn't last long. Most of the gags are old stuff, and the picture will prove disappointing after the last of the series which held a lot of real comedy.

Type of production...............................1 reel fan magazine

This series of peeps into the private affairs of people prominent in the screen world starts off with a few views of Marion Davies making "silent" for advertising purposes. Charles Hutchinson, the thrill maker, is next seen making a fight scene in a serial. There is also a short shot of Hutchinson and Josie Sedgwick arguing with their director. Teddy, the Mack Sennett dog, is seen next with his real owner enjoying a day off, and performing a few tricks. Anetha Getwell is shown driving an army tank over some rough country, in a very professional manner. Doralinda, the dancer, next insures her limbs before the camera, with a close up study of the much touted members. Frank Borzage, who directed "Humoresque," is seen at work directing an exterior scene, and the reel concludes with several shots of the Bushman family, Francis X., Beverly Bayne, son, Ralph, and the baby. This reel should prove as interesting as the others of the series to your fans who crave intimacy with the stars.

"All Stuck Up"—Fox

Type of production...............................1 reel animated cartoon

Mutt and Jeff take to the wild west, in this one, to sell the stickiest brand of flypaper in the world. Jeff does a little demonstrating of its power by walking around the ceiling on it. Beautiful Nell rushes in to escape from a bad gunman. Mutt off in the desert and man comes in very tough, Mutt loses his nerve, and the gunman shoots off all his clothes. Jeff turns the trick by tripping the bad man into a batch of flypaper and wins the girl. There are about the usual laughs in the reel, which is on the whole, more amusing than the average of the series.

"All Wrong"—Fox

Type of production...............................2 reel comedy

Clyde Cook is in this speedy and very unnatural picture of army life, and it provides good material for this recent addition to comedy stardom. Cook, although he uses familiar methods, and make-up, including the much worked trick mustache, is able to get results out of even old gags, and puts over some new ones for several big laughs. The limber comedian makes full use of his contortions as ability in this number, and makes both reels hold up well by fast work all the way through. It starts out with a company drill, and Cook, as Private Wright, is always wrong in the maneuvers. This provides some very funny business for a while, but is kept up too long and finally gets monotonous. The company is put on guard duty at the Mexican border, and Cook gets a lot of good stuff in with the border line. He gets a fill of whiskey smugglers. The second reel finds Private Wright doing secret service duty in plain clothes, and includes several good bits in a tough bootlegging saloon. Cook has a terrible time chasing the girl, and finally gets the company's Captain's daughter from the villains. It is almost all good stuff, and the piece should make a very good comedy offering. Jack Blystone directed.

This starts off with some artistically tinted views of Nikko, Japan, in winter. A Japanese lady is seen leaving her home to attend services in the temple. Some views of the temple itself are shown, and a part of the religious rites. Then there is the next subject, which is a few shots of a sausage factory, showing how link "dogs" are made. Following this is a view of the farm at the junction of Riverside Drive and Broadway, and a shot of the Victoria Glacier. The Hy Mayer Travelogue is the next thing in the reel, and this one shows the city of Provincetown, on Cape Cod. Some fishing scenes, a view of the town square, and a relic of the past in the form of the town crier are shown. The reel concludes with a unique shot of an ancient belury in Seville, Spain, showing the bell ringers swinging from the huge bell ropes. Of average interest with nothing of particular importance.

The Sleepyhead"—Pathe

Type of production...............................1 reel comedy

Eddie Boland and the Vanity Fair Girls are seen in this, which shows through all right, as it isn't a lot to it. It's faster than some of the previous ones of this series, and while the girls are not as much in evidence as before, they look very attractive when they are in front of the camera. The scene of this reel is set in a small room, and all the events are laid half dead old men. Boland is the doctor's assistant, and the Doc puts him in full charge. Eddie fires the homely nurses and gets a bunch of stranded show girls in their place. The girls do wonderful things to the morale of the old men. Incidentally Eddie gets his grip mixed with that of a prominent safe blower, and has difficulty getting his own back. The reel is shy on laughs, but moderately amusing all through. It is snappy, and should prove a satisfactory filler.

"A Tale of the Far North"—Educational

Type of production...............................1 reel travelogue

This is one of the Hudson's Bay Travel Series, and comprises a familiar study of the everyday life of the Eskimos who inhabit the Baffin Bay region. The picture is presented in a novel manner which makes even more interesting, a very good travel reel. It is offered as the life story of one of the tribe, who is seen telling it to the white man over a camp fire. The customs of the people of the far north are little known, and they are explained, and their mode of existence pictured in a highly entertaining way through the story of this one native's life. The picture follows him from the time he is a baby, still in his marriage, and all the events in the life of the man have been act out by Eskimos. They are shown engaging in peculiar wrestling games, seal fishing, canoe racing, and preparing the furs they have gathered for the Southern market. The entire footage of this one is good stuff, bound to be interesting to almost any audience, and the picture is an exceptionally good offering of its type.

"No Hope For The Drys"—Chester—Educational

Type of production...............................1 reel scenic and fish study

The first half of this Chester "Screenic" is devoted to a study of various sea fish. The Seal, Anemone, Sea Urchin, and others are shown at close range, and some of them prove interesting specimens. A community of sea gulls is photographed, showing the mother birds and young. A flock of pelicans offers several comical glimpses of the solemn faced birds. The last half of the reel, and by far the best part, is made up of some really beautiful shots of the Canadian Rockies. Most of the scenes are on the shores of Lake Louise, and the cinematographer has done some marvelous work to bring out the beauty of that country. The scenes are brought out better in this short bit of film, than in the average scenic. This part has been titled, "Silver Silences," and in addition to the above, some very fine pictures of the Victoria Glacier, bringing out the hugeness of the ice formations are presented. This part of the reel makes it an attractive offering, and the balance is interesting enough to carry it over as a good filler.

Gish Production
Interest as to What Will Become of the Feature Now About Half Completed

Considerable interest has been aroused in film circles over what will happen to the partially completed production which Lillian Gish was making as her first feature for Frohman Amusement Co. which, as noted on Friday, has passed into the hands of receivers.

It is known that several producers and distributors have been approached with a view to taking over the production and completing it. It is also known that efforts have been made to interest D. W. Griffith to take a hand and complete it. And it is not at all impossible that this may happen.

Albert W. Grey, general manager of D. W. Griffith, Inc., stated that the Griffith organization had no intention of taking over the Gish picture at the present time.

When Miss Gish left the Griffith, held to take up the contract offered by Wm. L. Sherrill there was much speculation as to how the venture would develop. The contract, for three years, called for a total of nearly $40,000. Up to the present about $4,000 has been spent on the production, and talk in film circles is to the effect that if Sherrill could have raised an additional $50,000 the production could have been completed.

The assets of the corporation are given as $240,000, including a valuation on negatives of $157,000. They also include unpaid stock subscriptions amounting to $10,000.

Dillon to Direct Barthelmess
Jack Dillon, who has just completed two pictures for Realart with Justine Johnstone starred, will direct Dick Barthelmess in his first starring picture for D. W. Griffith, Inc. The company will start work in about a week at the Mamaroneck studios on a story by Joseph Hergesheimer. Nothing has been decided upon relative to distribution.

Promise Films Free
There was a mass meeting held Friday morning of exhibitors and exchange agents at the 48th St. theater to complete plans for the Hoover relief fund. The F. I. L. M. Club members promised to donate free of charge the pictures which will be used at the special children's performance on the morning of Jan. 29.

Prizma Tie-Up
Company Plans to Allow "Black and White" Producers to Use Color Process

Prizma, Inc., plans to work in conjunction with the so-called "black and white" producers whereby the latter will have available the Prizma color process for the day, and it is said that a number of companies are considering the possibility of entering into a tie-up with the Prizma organization.

Carroll H. Dunning, vice-president of Prizma, in speaking of the plan stated that his company did not intend retaining for its exclusive use the color process which it owns. He stated that production plans would continue as in the past with a possi- ble increased output. In connection he stated that Prizma had completed two short subjects in which Madge Evans appears and that some of the smaller supply of longer subjects would be maintained.

Paramount arranged with Prizma for the insertion of a colored strip in "The Painted Lily," a new Mac Mur- ray-Robert Z. Leonard picture. Prizma titled "Passion" for First Na- tional and has arranged for the pro- duction which precedes "The Last of the Mohicans" this week at the New York and Brooklyn Strands. It would not prove surprising if, in the future, Prizma developed the graphic idea extensively, since it has available an extensive library from which to draw suitable material.

ANOTHER OF THE MODEST

"—STRANGER THAN FICTION—"

You bet that’s right. Ask Gustavus R. Rogers. GR and brother Saul handle Bill Fox's legal affairs, y'know. GR dropped into see "Way Down East" the other night. Picked up the program. Saw a note under the foreword. About mock marriages. Where Robert Edgar long cited as one case that of H. vs. H. in Vol 18 of Abbott's Digest of Court Cases in New York. Happened back in 1904. GR was the attorney. He won. Out flash from the past. You know the old line? About truth being stranger than fiction. GR’s all sold on it now.

BEHIND THE SCENES

WHAT’S EVE UNSELL DOING?

Lot of typewriters clicking. Lot of office space. Lot of people. Right down the street from WID’S. Eve Unsell’s new quarters. Eve is the lady who was selected to organize the scenario department in England. For Famous Players. Talks about a new idea in story preparation. All smiles. Looks wise. Says, “wait a few days.” Whassit all about, anyway?

SYMPATHY FOR SHERRILL

"Pop" Sherrill gave up the fight. Just couldn’t finance. That’s all. But it’s enough. So the Lillian Gish feature goes—Where? Not an astronomer. Can’t read stars. Or producers. But this is sure: "Bill" Sherrill’s getting a lot of sympathy. They say it’s tough times. But that’s the way it goes. Now “Bill” must start all over. Good weather to it. Fresh slate. New Year. All that sort of thing. Griff may finish the production. Just possible. "Jerry" Storm may start his own company. Sooner than he expected. That’s the way it goes.

"Way Down East" grossed $5,327.75 in two performances on New Year's Eve at the 44th St. theater. The gross business for the week ending on Saturday, the 19th of the picture's run on Broadway, was $21,373.50.

For the same period the picture, playing at the VOX in Chicago, did a gross business of $22,347. In Pittsburgh at the Sam S. Shubert theater it did a total business of $21,346.

Back from Coast
John Emerson, Anita Loos and James Creelman have arrived in New York from the coast where they saw the Emerson-Loos special, "Wife Insurance" placed in production.

Almost a New Record
"The Last of the Mohicans" business on Sunday fell a few dollars short of the Strand record which is held by "Kismet." The crowds at the theater were very large.

Jesse Lasky Here
Jesse L. Lasky upset everybody's calculations at the Paramount offices by arriving in New York from the coast on Saturday instead of yesterday as planned originally.

Sunday Showings for Pathé Film
Beginning on Sunday, Pathé will give a series of Sunday exhibitions at the Apollo theater of a hand-colored feature called "Behold the Man" a story dealing with the life of Christ. The picture is understood, was made in Europe.

A dinner was tendered at the Hotel Astor last night to the editors of the trade press by those interested in the Big Five.

A widespread advertising campaign regarding the plans of this company has been waged in the past few weeks.

Among those who were present besides the trade paper editors were C. L. Yearsley, Earl J. Hudson and Horace Judge of Associated First National.

With "Griff" Again?

Mae Marsh May Appear in the Next Picture for D. W.—Made Two for Robertson-Cole

Mae Marsh may appear in the next production to be made by D. W. Griffith. Albert L. Grey, Mr. Griffith's general manager, admitted yesterday that there was some talk of this, but that nothing definite had been decided upon.

At the same time Mr. Grey denied that Miss Marsh would return to the Griffith management and make a series for "D. W. Griffith, Inc." under the same arrangement the producer has with Dorothy Gish. The report emanated from the coast.

It was learned yesterday that Miss Marsh who was originally scheduled to make four a year for Robertson-Cole would in all probability only appear in two pictures for that company. One of these, "The Little Fraid Lady," has been released and the second is finished but not titled. The Robertson-Cole offices did not care to make any comment yesterday on the report.

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Los Angeles—Mae Marsh is quoted locally as stating that she has formed her own producing company and that she has already secured a vehicle for her first story. Production will probably be in the East.

Miss Marsh's name and that of D. W. Griffith are being linked together in connection with future production. Nothing definite can be learned here, however.

Visitors
E. R. Rogers, and Frank Dowler of the Signal Amusement Co. Chattanooga, are in New York in connection with their new $1,000,000 Capitol theater in Chattanooga. The house opens in about a month. They are Associated Exhibitor franchise holders.

Big Business

Despite the spring-like weather in New York on Sunday, Broadway theaters did the best business they have experienced in some weeks past.

At 8:30 on Sunday night there were crowds waiting to buy tickets at all the Broadway houses, including Loew's New York, where Douglas Fairbanks in "The Mark of Zorro" was playing to a second run on Broadway. The Strand had the biggest line waiting.

"First Born" for Strand

"The First Born," the first of Ses-sue Hayakawa's specials under his new Robertson-Cole contract, will play the Strand the last week of this month.
Big Tie-Up

B. B. Hampton and Pictorial Review for Better Pictures—Circularizing English Speaking Lands

Benjamin B. Hampton, who is at present producing features for Pathé and Hodkinson distribution, has perfected a tie-up with the Pictorial Review which is said to be one of the most important ever arranged in the business.

Hampton in the February issue of the publication, out Jan. 14, has an article titled, “Too Much Sex Stuff in the Movies,” which is designed to be the opening shot in a campaign for better pictures. Hampton will write a series of articles and in this connection Pictorial Review is launching a tremendous exploitation campaign in English speaking lands. One hundred thousand cards are being mailed to clergymen in the U.S., Canada and Australia enlisting their aid in the move; 21,000 cards of a different nature are being mailed to exhibitors in the U.S., Great Britain, Canada and Australia; those in the professional and business end of the industry to the number of 15,000 are included in another series, as are 50,000 club women scattered in this country and all English speaking sections of the world. The support of 50,000 school teachers is likewise being sought in this connection.

These communications are not being sent broadcast by the Hampton organization but emanate from the office of Arthur T. Vance, editor of the Pictorial Review. The publication has set aside a fund of $75,000 to advertise the first of the Hampton articles. Thirty thousand postcards in two colors are to be supplied to the newsstands.

The field force of the magazine will be instructed to secure endorsements from prominent people for the Hampton movement. In his article Hampton will point out that the curse for poor pictures rests with the public.

Newspaper Opinions

Bunty Pulls the Strings—Goldwyn Capitol

HERALD—Reginald Barker has converted Graham Moffatt's stage success to the screen with commendable success.

WORLD—There is beauty in the production.

TELEGRAPH—It is a picture blessed with a unusually large number of qualities to recommend it to the public—drama, atmosphere, novelty, pathos and suspense.

POST—Mr. Barker has contributed a picture of charm and gentle distinction, one that had both.

Globe—"Bunty" is really a droll little lan, and Leatrice Joy puts up a pleasantly quaint humor into the title role. The entire story, however—action, authors and atmosphere—ought not to have that much more spryly or three reels than five.

SUN—Reginald Barker has achieved something in the way of an intimate picture or Goldwyn.

The Passionate Pilgrim—F. P. L. Rivoli

AMERICAN—Altogether, "The Passionate Pilgrim" proved to be one of those rare films that enlist not only the sympathies but the interest. It seemed to be true to life.

TIMES—Mr. Vignola's treatment of this part of the story is cinematographically good. Particularly his use of the cuts, though simple and obvious, is effective. The settings are excellent.

HERALD—The intricacies of the story have been well handled by George Du Bois. Producer, scenario writer, and it holds the interest with at exceptionally plausible development.

WORLD—A mixture of love and big business, through which Robert G. Vignola, as director, has woven a gripping thread of interest, this photoplay ranks with the finest presented in recent weeks.

Journal—In fact, it is one of the best newspaper features ever produced.

Mail—The picture suffers somewhat from a lack of facile action and depends too largely upon its sub-titles to tell its story, but is interesting nevertheless.

Globe—It has one remarkable feature. The newspaper stories are real.

Sun—It is a story of love and big business, a combination that makes a romantic drama of more than usual quality.

Sunday News, Tribune, Telegram, Post and Evening World made no comment.

"The Last of the Mohicans"—A. P. Strand

TIMES—Mr. Tourneur has made an extraordinary picture seriously marred in one particular.

HERALD—"Last of Mohicans" is thrilling story as told in movies.

World—It must have cost a small fortune to put J. Fenimore Cooper's book into the film. Hundreds of Indians and soldiers and horses, and dozens of "sets" are employed, and throughout there is the evidence of expert direction.

Daily News—One comes away from the Strand with the memory of beautiful pictures—photography combining imagination and beauty of lighting, posture and grouping, to the intense satisfaction of the spectator. So far as picturization goes, "The Last of the Mohicans" is a work of art.

TRIBUNE—There are some perfectly hair-raising rides.

Mail—At all too rare intervals, certainly not more than once or twice a year, a picture is flashed on the screen for which the only just appellation is "Perfect." Such a masterpiece is Maurice Tourneur's magnificent screening of "The Last of the Mohicans." At the outset of the new year Tourneur's production is a challenge to directors of any company. It will be difficult to equal, practically impossible to surpass. The photography is perfect, and the continuity unimpeachable, the playing flawless, the locations magnificent, the direction unsurpassed. The picture is one which a Griffith could not improve upon.

The Estee Studios and Laboratories, Inc., have sued the International Film Service for $5,000 rent due up to Sept. 1 at $2,500 a month.

Supreme Court Justice McCoak has dismissed the suit of the Educational Films against Globe Indemnity Company to recover $3,574 for breach of contract by the Lincoln & Parker Co., for which the Globe acted as surety. The defendant contended that the plaintiff failed to give proper notice that the Lincoln & Parker Co. had defaulted on the contract.

On an assigne claim of the Froomman Amusement Corp. suit has filed in the Supreme Court by the Commonwealth Film Corp. against J. Frank Brockiss, Inc. It is alleged that the defendant bought the world rights excepting the U.S., Canada, and Alaska for "The Invisible Ray," a serial, which was completed May 16 last, and the defendant agreed to pay 70% of the gross and to pay at least $45,000 in six months, but up to date has paid only $32,500.

William Faversham has filed an answer in the Supreme Court to a suit by Joseph P. Buckister, Jr., a lawyer, to recover under an alleged contract by which he was to get 10% of sums received by the actor. The answer alleges that on Feb. 29 last Faversham employed Buckister to help negotiate a film contract with Lewis J. Selznick and that the plaintiff didn't advise him that he was acting also for Selznick.

TELEGRAM.—— * Done with extraordinary skill.

POST.——The director has lopped away everything but the sensational, and the sum of that is nothing but a melodrama of the old school variety. Mr. Feeney has staged some sequences of rare, even breathless beauty, pictures that have the quality of the best of that old English wall paper depicting Sylvia van Cortlandt and all pictures that are sometimes suggestive of Claude de Lorrain.

SUN.—— * This French producer has set a fashion that American directors might well follow, especially with his beautifully photographed outdoor scenes, which make nature almost as grand as Cooper described it. American, Journal, Grade and Evening World made no comment.

"The Bait"—F. P.-L.

Rialto

WORLD.—Purely as an interesting cinema play, "The Bait," Mr. Feeney's other production at the Rialto, surpassed the larger and more expensive one.

TRIBUNE.—It is principally because Miss Hampton that we liked the picture.  * We fancy that Miss Hamilton could do marvelous things with a polite comedy. She has no talent and charm and, best of all, sincerity. Somehow we fancy that she would need very little direction.

TELEGRAM.—Like the original, the play has many thrills.  * There is enough action in this fine reel picture to make a novel-serial picture.

SUN. — There is plenty of action in this five reel picture.

Receiver Named

For Wark Producing Corp., a Griffith Subsidiary—Company Made "Intolerance"

A petition in bankruptcy has been filed against the Wark Producing Corp. with headquarters at 1476 Broadway. The creditors named in the petition are the D. W. G. Corp., $10,000; Harry Wolfe, $4,000, and S. Meyer, $400.

It is alleged, that the liabilities of the company are $300,000 and the assets, consisting of cash and rights to films, $100,000. It is claimed that the company was formed for the purpose of producing and exploiting "Intolerance," which was personally directed by David W. Griffith, and that on or about Dec. 28, 1915, the company borrowed money from various individuals and that certificates of indebtedness were issued covering these loans to the extent of $300,000, of which it is said 55 per cent, has been paid off. The balance, $135,000, it is claimed became due on Jan. 1, 1921, and that the company is financially unable to meet its obligations.

It is for this reason and because it is thought the receiver will manage the affairs of the company so as to meet its obligations that the petition was filed. The receiver named by Judge Knox is Walter N. Seligsberg of Seligsberg, Lewis and Strouse.

Albert L. Grey of the Griffith offices when asked for a statement yesterday said he had no comment to make. Mr. Seligsberg, the receiver, stated that he expected to meet the full demands of the creditors and that he hoped to have matters straightened out in about ten days.

No Depression, Says Rogers

"First of all, I found that conditions were satisfactory and that any lull the exchangers were having was on account of the holiday season. If the exhibitor really analyzed his business and looked back at his receipts a year ago, he was rather surprised to find there was no real depression." Thus Charles Rogers, sales manager of Selznick, summarized his observations upon returning from a tour through the important sections of the country.

Supreme Court Justice Bihur has dismissed the suit of Julius Levy against the Pioneer Film Corp. to recover $25,000 for services. Levy alleged he was employed as a location scout for the film, and that the sum owed was the fair value of his services. He did not appear when the case was called for trial.

George Weston, writer, has sued the Goldwyn Picture Corp. in the Supreme Court for an injunction restraining it from producing and exhibiting a feature film from his book, "Oh, Mary, Be Careful." He states that the defendant made a contract with him for the purcasion of the literary property, and he has since been deposed down and was to get 5% of the net receipts. He alleges that the defendant failed to produce the film within a year as agreed upon, for that reason the contract has terminated. The defendant insists that it still holds the right to the production of the film, and that no definite time was stated for the release of the film, which was essentially a matter to be determined by the business judgment of the defendant. The defendant stated that it expects to release the film soon.

D.W.'s Fame—Why?

A product—and why? He states:

"Who was it that made D.W. Griffith famous?"

"It was the big legitimate theaters who laughed at the movies until they were forced to take them in to keep open, or was it small, family movie theaters, which his advertising specialists so cunningly conceived as to be the 'ordinary motion picture theaters' in which he 'Way Down East' is never to appear."

"It is announced for a week in a theater near Bryant Park, N.Y., that an enemy the motion picture could possibly have, has always held up to his liking in the press across the screen and refer to him as the 'master.'"

"When he gets something real good the screen's enemy, the 'legitimate theater,' gets it."

The communication was forwarded to the Griffith offices and the following reply was made by Gerrett J. Lloyd, for Mr. Griffith:

"Gratitude, as some cynic has said, 'is something that the other man doesn't give you."

"Mr. Morris perhaps does not remember: that one of the most influential and powerful executives in motion pictures, and one of the greatest of all, Mr. Griffith, said publicly: Griffith's showing of 'The Birth of a Nation' and his own other movies had in America the biggest single influence for growth that has come to motion picture theater patronage. He released the motion picture, the patronage of the country by at least 25%. He taught the world that a film could be an attraction as any stage play. He raised it to a new level in the minds of the public."

"Or that the controlling owner of a chain of motion picture theaters recently said: Wherever Griffith has shown 'Way Down East' as the regular picture, we notice a big stimulus in the patronage of our motion picture theaters. Griffith has done the only thing he could do with his long pictures, and it has been one of the best things ever known for the exhibitors at a show.'"

"The only times Mr. Griffith has gone outside the motion picture theaters to exhibit his films have been when the motion picture theaters were not in a position to accept them."

"Exhibitors have established a set policy in the conduct of their theaters as to admission prices, number of shows daily, and length of run."

"To avoid a disastrous conflict with this policy Mr. Griffith has left it to the motion picture theaters to exhibit 'The Birth of a Nation,' 'Intolerance,' 'The Birth of a New World' and now 'Way Down East.'"

"Nothing will please him more than for the same spirit to come when the motion picture theaters will be in a position to accept films of 12 reels, or less, or for the presentation of their length and popularity demands."

"We have not had the opportunity to advertise that 'Way Down East' would not be shown in the 'ordinary motion picture theaters.' We have inserted this note in our advertisements:

"Owing to length, cost of production, and conditions contracts this production will never be shown other than at first class theatricals."

"We have shown it in motion picture theaters where the theaters were willing to change prices and number of shows daily to accommodate the pictures, and probably will do so many, many times in the future."

All Films Dealing With Criminals on Forbidden List

(Chicago—Special to WID'S DAILY)

Chicago—the police department has issued new regulations regarding the showing of films in which criminals appear. Chief of Police, Fitzmorris, who has been very active of late in reducing the number of crimes in the city, has issued orders prohibiting the exhibition of films in which criminals appear, either as heroes or villains. Even pictures in which the criminal ends his celluloid career in a prison cell are banned.

It seems the order was issued several weeks ago by Chief Fitzmorris but it has just become public when three boys who were sentenced to the reformatory blamed their crimes on what they had seen in a picture.

First National Officials Going to Show the "Big 5" (Special—High Exhibition Value) Placed

First National officials are particularly enthusiastic of the first of the "Big 5" group of pictures which the circuit will offer during 1921. As noted, the pictures in this grouping are "Passion," "The Kid," "Man and Marriage," "The Oath" and "Sowing the Wind."

Circuit officials are of the opinion that this series offers the most important productions released by any organization or in fact, any in the business. Exhibition values are $1,000,000 each have been placed on "Passion," "The Kid" and "Man and Marriage" and values ranging high up into the hundreds of thousands have been fixed for the others.

Los Angeles—There was an important conference of the directors of Associated Producers, Inc., held last night. Oscar A. Price, president of the company, attended the meeting.

First Move Killed

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Minneapolis, Minn.—The first attempt in Minnesota to put over Sunday closing was defeated by a vote of three to one at Waterville. The ordinance carried a rider which would compel exhibitors to exhibit pictures to censors at three o'clock in the afternoon of their showing. If censors decided the ordinance was unfair the theater would be dark that day.

If the ordinance had passed at Waterville, many Minnesota towns and smaller cities would have followed suit. The Women's Christmas Temperance Union and other women's organizations were back of the ordinance, therefore it is looked upon as a big victory for Northwest exhibitors. The matter was of such importance that president, W. A. Steffes personally conducted the fight against the ordinance for the United Theatrical Protective League.

Talk of Censors

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Albany, N. Y.—There is talk of censorship in the air again. With the advent of the Republican administration, it is expected that various reform organizations will again revive the agitation for a censorship bill for New York State.

Various "uplifting" bodies have indicated from time to time their desire to secure a more strict regulation of pictures and now that the legislature has convened, the presentation of a new bill is looked for.

Lillian Gish Says She Has Not Signed With Anyone—Wants Rest First

Lillian Gish, who completed about two reels of "The World's Shadows" for Lotte A. Mannheimer, when the latter company voluntarily went into bankruptcy, has not signed with any other producer, according to a statement made to a representative of WID'S DAILY over the telephone on Wednesday evening.

Miss Gish said she had not even bothered about a new contract and that she was determined to have four weeks' rest because she "hadn't had a vacation in six or seven years."

She admitted that she didn't know just what she would do and stated that there was nothing definite to the report published by an afternoon paper that she would form her own producing unit.

"I am not going to talk contracts for four weeks," said Miss Gish.

Robertson-Cole have purchased "Seven Years' Bad Luck," a five reel comedy starring Max Linder. Curwood Denial
James Oliver Curwood, through his agents, the Robert H. Davis Corp., denied yesterday a man named Joseph Ziden owns the rights to any of his stories.

"In several trade journals recently appeared the announcement that the E. P. Hermann Corp. had the screen rights to four of my novels. When called upon to explain, E. P. Hermann wired:

"In reply to your wire Joseph Ziden New York City offered us four of your stories written before 1910 but deal fell through."

"I have never heard of Joseph Ziden, and he has no screen rights to novels of mine. There have, however, been several attempts to foist upon producer's old, original one and two reel scenarios of mine, and old short stories, which have been advertised by their vendors as 'novels' and 'big feature stories.'"

It was impossible to locate the Joseph Ziden mentioned above for a statement.

Quebec Censor Board Condemns Film—Producer Plans Fight in the Courts

D. W. Griffith has been advised by his representatives in Montreal that “Way Down East,” submitted to the board of censors for the Province of Quebec, has been turned down as “not passed,” and that they issued condemnation of his work which prohibits its presentation in that province. The producer, through his general manager, Albert L. Grey, issued the following statement:

“The news that the Quebec censors have condemned ‘Way Down East’ seems on the face of it record in this country so absurd that I scarcely know what to say. In America the story and its treatment in picture form has been so widely praised by ministers, judges, editors, federal and civic authorities, statesmen, professional men and other good citizens, that I am at a loss to understand the attitude of the Quebec censors. I suppose our only remedy is to take the issue before the courts there and depand upon the spirit of justice which I have always found to prevail in the Dominion of Canada.”

The essence of our story which they have singled out for attack is the very part of the production which the preachers and moral proponents of the presentation have used as illustrations for their praise.

“When you consider that more than 5,000 ministers of the gospel have seen the production of ‘Way Down East!” and have written wonderful letters to us dwelling upon its great moral force and the good it is sure to accomplish, it is easy to understand why this attitude of the Quebec officials seems so astounding.”

Laemmle on Long Trip
Carl Laemmle leaves today for Palm Beach, Havana,-Nazi-Orleans and finally the coast. With him go his daughter Rosabella and Mrs. Anna Fleckle. He will supervise the production of the Eddie Polo serial while in Cuba and will be gone for some time.

On the eve of her marriage to a man she knows she never could love, Nance Abbott’s thoughts go back to another man, the mate of her soul, whom she has left to die on a flimsy raft at sea that she may claim the riches her wealthy fiancé can give her. A scene from Thomas H. Ince’s tremendous melodrama, “Lying Lips,” his second Associated Producers’ production, featuring House Peters and Florence Vidor. Mr. Ince in person directed the big scenes in the picture.—Advt.

Strike on Coast?
Operators Make New Demands—130 Theaters Plan to Resist Action of Union

(Special to WID’S DAILY)

Los Angeles—A strike of operators at all local theaters looms up as a serious possibility because of the demands made by the union for shorter hours and increased wages and the determination of the theater owners to resist these demands.

The union is asking for a seven day and a six day week as well as a wage increase of $14 a week. One hundred and thirty local theaters plan to resist the demands of the union. An offer of a $5 increase has been made and rejected by the union which insists upon the original demands.

Licenses Issued
But Local Firms Will Not Admit They Have Received Them from the German Government

It is understood that a number of American exporters have received licenses from the German Government for the shipping of films to that country of American pictures.

For obvious reasons, local film exporters deny that this is true. Several disclaimed any knowledge of the matter, stating that so many rulings have been issued by Berlin that they haven’t got them all clear themselves.

It is understood that the net receipts for last Sunday where $2,685 at $1.65 top.

Seiden Refutes Curwood Claim

Joseph Seiden, spoken of in yesterday's issue as "Joseph Ziden," stated yesterday through his attorney, Harry K. Koch, that he owns the rights to four Curwood stories, two of which were published in Pearson's and two in the Outing Magazine. James Ocean curwood denied in yesterday's issue that Seiden owned the rights to any of his works.

Koch speaking for Seiden stated yesterday:

"I am attorney for the Magazine Stories Syndicate, Inc., a domestic corporation, which is the owner of the motion picture rights of the four Curwood stories in question. Joseph Seiden, spoken of as 'Ziden' in your article, is the vice-president of this corporation. On behalf of my client, I wish to declare to you that Seiden owns the exclusive motion picture rights of four Curwood stories entitled 'God Of Her People' and 'The Coyote,' published in Pearson's Magazine, and 'Test of a Code,' and 'Udo Sam' published in the Outing Magazine and acquired these rights from the respective publishers. My client has practically completed the sale of the motion picture rights of these stories to two reputable corporations and the publication of this article by you has resulted in at least, temporarily delaying the consummation of these contracts."

Late yesterday afternoon Carl Milligan of the Robert H. Davis Corp., stated he had received a letter from Curwood in which the author stated that he would resist an attempt to make pictures, old stories of his. He did not deny that Seiden owned several of his stories.

"MAD LOVE"
Spells Heart-throb and Patronage
In the Courts

A jury before Supreme Court Justice John J. McManus Saturday found defendant in a suit of Charles Miller against the Metro Pictures Corp. The plaintiff sued for $2,500, alleged that he was engaged at $300 a week to direct the film "Wilson or the Kaiser," and that the defendant also agreed to pay him $300 a week to supervise the picture for the same time. He alleged that he was employed fourteen weeks, and for four weeks, and that he earned $9,000, of which sum the defendant was unpaid. Metro, contended it paid Miller all that was due.

Samuel Goldfarb has sued Charles Penrose in the Supreme Court to recover $4,000 paid the defendant for half of Persor's half interest in the film, "Face to Face With Your Relatives in Poland." Goldfarb says that this film showing the peculiar conditions in Poland was represented as a medium which would attract many thousands of theatergoers to see if they could recognize any of their relatives among the persons photographed. He said that Penrose told him he had booked and rented the film for the theater, that it cost $16,000 to produce in Poland, that the film showed the faces of 25,000 persons in Poland and that he had a list of 5,000 persons in the United States with relatives in Poland who would want to see the film. The plaintiff says the film did not cost the sum stated, that the defendant did not have a list of more than 5,000 persons and that the pictures of not more than 5,000 persons were shown on the film, for which reason he wants his money back.

Vanderbergh Expedition Reel

Hugo Riesenfeld held a special show of his Paramount-Vanderbergh Expedition picture at the Rivoli on Friday morning. Preceding the showing of the picture Dr. Vanderbergh gave a brief report of the purpose of his expedition and went into detail as to some of the customs of the various tribes in the territory which the trip covered. Their various ceremonies and habits are presented in a film called "Wild Men of Africa." Some remarkably fine pictures have been secured by Dr. Vanderbergh showing the different tribes. Some of the scenes are a bit uncanny, but there are others which are really amusing and betraying others dealing with the marriage market. The titles have been carefully written and are always appropriate. The appreciation of the picture is greatly enhanced by the short description before the showing.

Interesting

The following has been received from Houck's Film Co.:

"Most of us see clearly the future of our industry, despite passing flurries and foolish newspaper articles. The apprehension, the fear of 'the end' is fading away. The future is coming from us. Our industry is secure and powerful to-day. Yet from the past, as given by G. H. Montague, in the Harvard Journal of Economics, 1902-03, I quote the following more than:

Deadly Parallel

Overproduction of oil in 1870 and 1871 had increased the depression... feeling throughout the industry was extremely nervous... Throughout 1873 there was a disposition on the part of producers outside the region of the great wells to suspend operations... in 1878. The recent month's has been marked by接连 to resumption of production, and bitter antagonism of producers and oil buyers... riots... meetings were held... men were hanged in effigy. A group of masked men marched the streets and groaned and hooted before the offices of the buyers. Numerous secret societies formed among the producers, and every morning the streets and sidewalks were found placarded with cabalistic signs and proclamations.

Putting It Over

Here's how a brother exhibitor pulled his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellows know how you cleaned up.

Charleston, W. Va.—The Carrier Bros. of the Kearse theaters sprung a big hit here to the far-off tune of big returns. The dominant idea of the campaign was the placing on sale of “Assurance” as a staple commodity. Two styles of gift books, gotten up in elaborate style, were printed—a children’s book containing 10 admission nickels, and selling for $1; an adults’ book containing 3 tickets, and priced at $1.50. All energies were turned toward popularizing gift books as the most appropriate small gift procurable. Two styles of one-sheets, window cards and 24-sheets were abundantly used for two weeks before the books were brought out. The largest bookings were the local branch of the American Legion and several societies handled the books on a 15% basis.

Ten thousand gift books were originally printed. Immediately before Xmas a rush order was placed for 5,000 more. Allowing 15% for all overhead, a total of $15,000 will be realized. This can be utilized during the holiday season by any showman anywhere. It has been a happy idea in Charleston, as, is attested by the volume of sales.

Nashville—the management of the Elite, for their showing of “The Devil’s Passkey,” made up a full page layout from bunched scenes of the picture and alter considerable dickering with the newspaper secured the page in four flashing colors. The page occasioned a lot of talk, not only in 5,000 copies, but also was largely instrumental in smashing the house record on the picture.

Utica, N. Y.—A novel stunt was used by Frederick Hathaway in connection with the Alhambra showing of Mark Sennett’s “Married Life.” A large paper-gard Edith Roble to the form of legal documents, and labelled on the outside with the county, state and other wording to make it look like a legal document, with the heaviest type reading, “Marriage License.” Inside under the heading “Marriage License” was the following word matter: “The bearer is entitled to all the fun, humor, joy and pleasure of married life without any of the legal obligations.” The $2.00 is eliminated from this special license, and the bearer acquires all the privileges herein enumerated, upon presentation of the regular admission ticket to the Alhambra Theater.

It has been found that the public will pay real money for such folders, which are known to the manufacturers of novelties as “Kid” cards, and when a theater gives them away there is the assurance that they will not be thrown away without going the rounds of the friends of the possessor.

Los Angeles—Have you solved the problem of eliminating useless noise from your theater? If you haven’t, here is a system devised by the management of the Kinema, which is working out successfully. The Kinema has had cards printed with hijacking scenes on them. “We sincerely hope not to offend by calling your attention to your present demonstration, which is embarrassing to those sitting near you.”

These cards are in possession of the ushers, who hand them to persons who are reading titles, talking or otherwise making noise.

Williston, Minn.—George Sudder- hall, manager of the Orpheum, dis- trict, has been ordered by the governor to Washington on Jan 27, when the U. S. Chamber of Commerce meets there.

Chinatown Underworld Stuff Interesting. Theme Is Light

Priscilla Dean in “OUTSIDE THE LAW”
Browning Prod.—Universal

DIRECTOR ..................... Tod Browning
AUTHOR ........................ Tod Browning
SCENARIO BY .................. Lucien Hubbard
CAMERAMAN ................... Wm. Fildew
AS A WHOLE...... Mighty good entertainment, based on underworld stuff. Needs cutting

STORY......Lacks strength, but splendid work of Priscilla Dean and Lon Chaney lifts satisfactorily

DIRECTION ..................... Uniformly excellent PHOTOGRAPHY...... Very good. Several wonderfully fine shots

CAMERAWORK .................. Good
STAR.......Mighty good performance of difficult role overacted at times

SUPPORT......One of the best casts ever assembled.
Lon Chaney mighty fine in dual role; E. A. Warren as the Chinese philosopher excellent

EXTERIORS......Very good, especially those of Chinatown

INTERIORS ................. Up to the mark

DETAIL.........Trifling slip-ups in several titles; otherwise excellent

CHARACTER OF STORY......How underworld folk go “straight” after thrilling exciting experiences

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... 7,754 feet

Tod Browning’s promise as evidenced in “The Virgin of Stamboul” with Priscilla Dean is justified in the production he has given Universal with Miss Dean again as a star. “Outside the Law” is the result. It is a mighty good picture. It needs cutting, chiefly because it sags heavily in the middle and when this cutting is taken care of it should be splendid, actionful entertainment of the kind that a lot of people like.

Just as large numbers of people refuse to lose their love of Westerns, so there are many who like the underworld stuff. They eat it up. They are going to like “Outside the Law.”

It is a very interesting production with a lot of action and gives Priscilla Dean another opportunity of registering ability, as the heroine who is somewhat different from the usual, sickly-sweet, sentimentalist who clings to her lover. Just to be different, Priscilla fights the idea of love and her lover and it takes the soft, warm arms of another woman’s baby to bring her to a realization of what home and kiddies will mean. She registers this very definitely in the end.

Just before the clinch comes there is a regular hellcat battle, Browning seems to like this stuff. In “The Virgin of Stamboul,” he had about two reels of battle between the Moors before Priscilla and her lover finally were allowed to drift into peace and in “Outside the Law,” he does it all over again, in Chinatown with gangsters, “bulls,” and all of the rest, shooting, tumbling over chairs, partitions, smashing crockery, so that when hero Wheeler Oakman finally slips his hand into Priscilla’s, his face has all the appearance of a Hamburger steak before it is cooked. They certainly treat him rough. But he has nothing on Lon Chaney, who, after being batted all over the place, is finally shot.

This closing sequence will probably be edited, because it is a little ruff and gory as it stands.

Many Opportunities To Capitalize This Thriller

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Here is another good one with Priscilla Dean. Also you have Lon Chaney, whose work in “The Penalty” will be remembered for a long time. In this picture he gives another excellent performance and you can talk about him to the limit. If you say he is the best character actor on the screen you won’t be very far wrong.

If your crowd liked “The Virgin of Stamboul,” do not hesitate to lay it on thick and tell them this is the same exciting, thrilling sort of story, played in Frisco’s Chinatown, with a battle at the finish that is bound to get them going.

The title is catchy and Universal’s campaign to attract attention in New York City is proving excellent. They are running a billboard campaign containing a lot of questions, such as “Do you work on Sunday? You are outside the law.” They are also running a series of billboard posters, such as “Do not be misled by malicious propaganda. You are not outside the law if you work on Sunday.” You may not be able to go in for heavy exploitation such as this, but you can do something with teaser copy and with posters along the same line.
"Black Beauty" Characterized by Thrills And Extravagant Production

"BLACK BEAUTY" Vitagraph

DIRECTOR .................. David Smith
AUTHOR .................... Anna Sewell
SCENARIO BY ............... Mr. & Mrs. George Randolph Chester
CAMERAMAN ................ Reginald E. Lyons
AS A WHOLE.............. Extravagant and spectual production. Drags in spots but offers several good thrills and a fine finish

STORY.................. Two plots. A romance interwoven with "Black Beauty's" autobiography

DIRECTION.............. Excellent at times, although effort to create suspense by intermittent shots of the two stories, sometimes fails to register

PHOTOGRAPHY ............ Excellent
LIGHTINGS .................. Good
CAMERA WORK ............. Fine

PLAYERS.................. Jean Paige looks charming, and gives a pleasing performance James Morrison well suited to part, all others adequate

EXTERIORS.............. Splendid hunt and horse race shots

INTERIORS.................. Elaborate and correct

DETAIL.................. Very good English atmosphere

CHARACTER OF STORY...... "Black Beauty's" life story, along with love and intrigue of the people closest to the horse

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION..... About 6,800 feet

In picturizing "Black Beauty," the world famous story of a horse's life, Vitagraph selected a theme that appears on the face of it to offer poor screen material. They got around this by having Mr. and Mrs. George Randolph Chester weave in between the incidents of the horse's life, a "human" story of love triumphing over a scheming villain.

The success of the picture, with most audiences, is going to depend on this "human" theme, for the story of the horse holds the interest only in those scenes involving fast action. Among the latter are some very good shots of a fox hunt, and a thrilling horse race at the finish, which has been admirably done, and will be apt to raise them off their seats.

Jean Paige performs very pleasingly as Jessie Gordon, and is well supported by James Morrison, who is excellently cast as Harry Blomefield. Probably the main objection will be a feeling that the material has been strung out in places to cover space, thus making it sag in several spots.

The story which runs side by side with the horse story in intermittent sequences, which are distinguished by the raising of curtains on the screen, deals with incidents in the life of "Black Beauty's" human friends.

At a house party given by Squire Gordon, his daughter Jessie, and Harry Blomefield are playing games with the little children, although they have reached the age where Harry realizes that he loves her. Among the guests is Jack Beckett, who lives by his wits, and who has entree because he is a favorite of the haughty Lady Wynwaring. The squire gives Lord Wynwaring a donation of 800 pounds for charity, which Beckett steals.

During a fox hunt next morning, Jessie's brother George, is killed by a fall from his horse, and Beckett, having stolen the money from Wynwaring's room places it in the pocket of the dead man, and tells Jessie that her brother is the thief. To prevent Beckett from telling her mother, Jessie promises to marry him when she becomes of age.

Meanwhile she has realized that she loves Harry,
who can not understand her wish to marry Beckett.

Several years pass, Beckett tries to elope with Jessie, is foiled, and after a great race sequence Black Beauty carries hero Harry to Jessie, foiling the villain's plans.

The Title And A Promise of Spectacular Thrills Will Put It Over

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The story of "Black Beauty" is so famous in every part of the country, that the title alone will be sufficient to draw crowds. You can appeal to lovers of the book by telling them that the story has been retained without change or alteration.

Also promise an extravagant production, and make a strong feature of the thrills contained in the picture.

There are several good ones and you can talk a lot about the race at the climax, which is as fine a thrill as you could want. The names of Jean Paige and James Morrison can be used to advantage.

It is a clean, wholesome picture, a fact which you can make an especial appeal to women and children.
The book is so well known that there will naturally be curiosity to see it visualized.

CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Crook frames innocent shop girl then kidnaps her and uses her to satisfy his own ends

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ........... 5,289 feet

And still they come. “The Bait” is another crook melodrama dealing with the ways and means of those who make their living by their wits, using said wits to the best advantage among the wealthy. The picture is an adaptation of Sidney Toler’s stage play “The Tiger Lady.” Besides the business of the crooks there’s a murder which takes place at the very beginning and they go all the way back and lead up to the murder before you know who the dead man and his assailant are.

This was evidently done to create suspense but it hasn’t. Since the audience doesn’t know who was killed or who killed him they forget all about the murder in what follows, so it might just as well have been told straight off in the first place. The title and the characters are provided with rather appropriate catch names which suit their respective parts in the story effectively. The star is “The Bait,” the girl used to “frame” the innocent shop girl in the minnow, and so on.

There is a love story running through it and the climax is reached effectively with the hero and heroine coming into their own and the villain getting his just deserts. It’s really a good “fan” picture so for this type of audience the production will most likely give satisfaction.

Joan Grainger is about to be “sent up” after being falsely accused of stealing, when she is kidnapped by Bennett Barton, the master mind of a band of crooks of which Simpson is also a member. Joan accepts Barton’s assistance and he sends her to Europe where he later joins her. They live in luxury and Joan meets John Warren, a wealthy American. Joan receives her first jar of suspicion as to her benefactor’s sincerity when he introduces her as his daughter. He then makes clear his plan. Joan is to marry the wealthy Warren so Barton will have access to the money.

The girl rebels but Barton threatens to send her back to jail or worse still, to expose her past to Warren, with whom she is really in love. The entire party returns to America and eventually Barton forces Joan to accept Warren’s proposal of marriage. In the meantime some of Barton’s pals have double-crossed him and told Joan of the theft frame-up and they secure a signed confession from the girl that did the “framing.”

In an effort to secure the confession Barton is killed by Simpson, who is also after the confession that he will have the “goods” on Barton. Warren is willing to have Joan despite all and they are happy.

Tourneur’s Name Should Be Your Main Talking Point

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This is the sort of picture best suited to typical “fan” audiences. There’s mystery, murder, crooks, a love story and all around melodrama that appeals to this crowd. If you cater to this class you will satisfy them with “The Bait.” You can announce it as a Maurice Tourneur production. His previous successes should attract them to this.

If you think well of it you can use the author’s name and say that this is an adaptation of his stage play “The Tiger Lady.” For a catchline say: “If you were being sent to jail on a false charge and was suddenly kidnapped from the law would you accept the assistance of one who offered you a life of luxury even though you didn’t know the source. But see how she was used as ‘The Bait’ in the scheme.”

CHARACTER OF STORY ....... Incidents in the household of Tam Biggar, stern Scotch parent whom Susie Simpson decides shall no longer remain a widower

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .... 6,255 feet

For those who like Scotch atmosphere—not liquid—"Bunty Pulls the String" will afford a real bit of pleasure. Reginald Barker's adaptation of Graham Moffat's play has retained all the humor, humaness and character of the original and through the augmented possibilities afforded by the camera there are many scenes and ideal locations, that are pictures in themselves. The exteriors are really picturesque.

The dialogue of the original may be missed but the dialect has been maintained throughout the titles which are well written and contain humor in themselves. The direction is splendid. There are some comedy touches, typical of Scotch customs and manners that register effectively.

Leatrice Joy's delightful personality dominates the "glad" theme of the picture while Raymond Hatton and Josephine Crowell contribute the comedy. Both the latter give unusually fine performances. Russell Simpson handles the role of the stern and righteous father of Bunty. Others who handle smaller parts well are Casson Ferguson, Rowland Rushton, Cullen Landis, Edythe Chapman, Otto Hoffman and Sadie Gordon.

Bunty had kept house for her father since her mother's death. She had two brothers, the older boy in the city while the younger is still at home taking his "threshin's." Susie Simpson, a designing widow, hoped to become the second wife of Bunty's father, Tam Biggar, and so she placed some money in his care to gain his favor: Weelum, Susie's nephew is in love with Bunty but they haven't saved quite enough to get married.

But the stern Tam Biggar would have none of Susie and when he found it necessary to give his oldest son the money Susie has placed in his care because the boy had stolen and Tam would not have the name of Biggar disgraced, he feared the widow more than ever. Then Eelen Dunlop appeared at the Biggar home and when Susie learned that she was Tam's childhood sweetheart, she decided to ask for her money, since she couldn't have Tam.

But Tam refused to talk "business" on the Sabbath and so the matter was delayed a day. The next day Bunty pulled the strings. She gave Weelum's and her savings to her father to replace the debt and then made the startling announcement that the widow had cheated Weelum out of his inheritance. The widow was forced to make restitution and a double wedding was arranged—Weelum and Bunty—Tam and Eelen.

Tell Them You'll Give Them a Bit of 'Scotch'

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

It isn't often that you get real "Scotch" nowadays so you ought to make a big hit with "Bunty Pulls the Strings." Scotch atmosphere in pictures is still a bit out of the ordinary, so you have something to talk about in that. Reginald Barker's production of Graham Moffat's stage play has a realistic and delightfully pleasing old fashioned atmosphere and you can promise them it's good to look at.

Use the producer's name and recall his "The Branding Iron." You can talk about a splendid cast and can use names if you think well of it. Play up the title extensively. Be sure to secure a press sheet provided by Goldwyn. It contains many good exploitation hints. Catchlines could read: "Want a taste of real Scotch? Go to the blank theater and see 'Bunty Pulls the Strings.'"

DETAIL .......................... Some very good titles

CHARACTER OF STORY.....Rookie returns to find himself rich in money but he wants romance and adventure—he gets it

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ........... 4,123 feet

The story itself doesn’t boast of much unusual comedy business but the way it has been done, together with the work of Frank Currier who plays the part of the humorous Dad and Doris May as the “girl” in the case and then some well written titles—all these things make “The Rookie’s Return” thoroughly enjoyable.

Perhaps the biggest comedy bit is where Douglas enlists the aid of a “friend” to help locate his sweetheart’s father. He says some not altogether complimentary things about the father to the “friend” and here’s where the laugh comes in. The audience knows that the “friend” is really the father who doesn’t want to spoil a good joke and offers his assistance to find himself. Another good bit (the title writer’s inning) shows the lovers getting into a cab with the shades drawn. It’s dark inside and so the screen remains dark except for the somewhat “slushy” remarks being passed by the occupants—you know—“taxi” talk.

James Stewart Lee, returned rookie, decides to make his own way in the world and not go to his wealthy Aunt, but he isn’t very successful until he is hit by a golf ball driven by Alicia, a rich girl. James doesn’t want the girl to see his humble boarding place so he has her drive him to his aunt’s, where he learns she is dead and he is the heir.

James and Alicia fall in love, but it’s interrupted by the disappearance of the girl’s father who has taken himself off to get away from the process of housecleaning which is going on in his home. The rookie meets the father and not knowing him previously asks the man’s assistance in locating his sweetheart’s father. The old man decides to have some fun for himself and enters into the search. He makes it good and lively by staging a kidnap and eventually the truth comes out and the sweethearts continue their interrupted love affair.

No Need to Worry About This Unless You Don’t Book It

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Since he won his way into the hearts of the picture public in “Twenty-Three and a Half Hour’s Leave” this delightful personality in the form of Douglas MacLean has been rather successfully keeping up the good work and in “The Rookie’s Return” he again manages to put you in a happy frame of mind and you just have to like him. His smile sets the thing going right off the (first) reel and from then on he keeps it going.

The supporting cast in this case deserve a goodly share of credit for the comedy business and the title writer also has more than a little to do with it. The direction is very good and Nelson has managed to get the most out of the story’s possibilities. Catchlines should go well. Say: “Ever get hit by a golf ball? Try it once. Might bring you good luck. See how it happened in ‘The Rookie’s Return,’ Douglas MacLean’s latest.”

CHARACTER OF STORY......Old Western pioneer turns tables on Wall Street crooks who are fleecing his grandson

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ....... 5,693 feet

It will be conceded by a big majority of picture patrons that Harry Leon Wilson’s imaginative romance of the “West coming to the East,” is the sort of tale that makes for real screen entertainment of the right sort, in its picture form. Nothing deep or problematic about it, but an enjoyable romance, the sort of entertainment that no one can find much fault with.

It’s a clean, snappy comedy, with swift moving action most of the way through, and enough element of suspense to provide an exciting climax, even if it does turn out the way the audience has guessed. The scenarist and director are responsible for keeping the story true to its original form, and presenting it in a clear and smooth way.

The one spot in the picture where there seems to be a slight bit of stalling is toward the close, but it isn’t long and the suspense previously created will make it unnoticeable to many.

The story begins with the Bines family in Montana City, after the death of Daniel J. Bines, the millionaire builder. Uncle Peter Bines, who founded the fortune, wants the family to stay in the west. P. Percival Bines, of the third generation, and his sister Psyche, want to live in New York.

Avice Milbrey of New York who is passing through Montana City in Rulon Shepler’s private car, causes Percy to firmly decide for New York when he assists her to catch the train after a thrilling dash in an auto.

The family, except Uncle Peter, go to New York, where Percy falls in love with Avice, who is to be forced to marry Shepler because he holds financial reins on Avice’s father. Shepler starts in to break Percy in Wall Street. Rumors of this reach Uncle Peter who comes to New York and plays a secret game in Wall Street, “coppering” all of Percy’s bets. The financial crash comes and with it a blow at Percy’s reputation on a frame-up involving him with a chorus girl.

Avice makes a financial clean-up through money invested with Uncle Peter, and she then lends it to the old man to win or loose for both of them.

Just when Percy thinks he hasn’t a cent left, Uncle Peter appears with all the money won back. Avice straightens out her father’s finances with her winnings, and the end finds her with Percy—now Peter—on their way to their home in the west.

Promise Them Real Entertainment—Author’s Name Will Help
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You need not be afraid to make promises of a high class entertainment, good comedy, and a pretty little romance for this picture, because it will back you up, and undoubtedly will please your patrons, no matter what class audiences you cater to. Featuring the interest of the story itself is the best bet, although you also have well known names in the cast, in Robert McKim, Claire Adams, and Joseph Dowling. Tell them what it’s about, as the idea of the crude old westerner cleaning up the Wall Street sharks carries an appeal.

Harry Leon Wilson is a well known and popular writer, and from the wide circle of readers who enjoy his stories in current magazines, his name will be valuable in your advertising.

CHARACTER OF STORY......Crooks play “fairy godmother” to modern Cinderella, in order to rob wealthy family during the ball, and she catches them

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.... About 6,000 feet

The old story of Cinderella is carried out even to the lost slipper found by the prince, in this up-to-date version of the fairy tale. And the original is scarcely more improbable in some of its happenings than the present tale, no part of which is plausible if it be regarded as anything but a fairy story.

There is a fair amount of good comedy running through the piece, but instead of being evenly distributed, it has been bunched, leaving some portions rather flat. The comedy is of the kind that almost any type of audience will enjoy, and there is probably enough of it to put the picture over in most houses.

It is well directed for the greater part, but the scenes between the star and the hero are not well done. They are devoid of romance and most of them are insipid.

Viola Dana is well cast. She takes the part of Connie McGill, a little scullery maid, in the kitchen of the newly rich Valentines. Having seen a picture of Prentice Blue, one of the society lights, in a magazine, she calls him her Prince and builds castles in the air with Prentice as the hero.

Connie sees Prentice as the guest of the Valentines, who are trying to marry him to their daughter. An accident in the dining room brings her to Blue’s attention.

Blue, who has nothing but his social standing, is also sought by the wealthy Nathaniel Flint, for his daughter, Helen. Flint advertises extensively that at a gorgeous birthday party he is giving for Helen, there will be half a million dollars worth of jewels on display.

The value of the gifts attracts the attention of “Ma” Dugan and her band of crooks. False credentials assure the admittance of one member of the party. But upon arriving at the ball, the crooks find that the detective on guard knows them, and when Connie, standing in the crowd, audibly wishes she were going to the party, she soon gets her wish through the aid of the crooks.

Attired in borrowed finery, she meets Blue, who falls in love with her. The jewels are stolen just as she leaves the house, and Blue is suspected, because he has in his pocket the slipper Connie has dropped in her flight.

The crooks need the slipper which holds the key to their hidden wealth, and Connie, in fear, attempting to get it for them from Blue, captures both the band and her Prince.

Star’s Name The Best Bet, And You Can Promise Some Good Comedy
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The star’s name offers probably the best point of exploitation in this, and if Viola Dana is well liked by your patrons you should be able to play this one up successfully. Tell them that the star’s performance is highly amusing, and let them know that she looks very attractive and charming.

It will also be safe to promise a good amount of real comedy and you can link this up with something about the comparison of the little maid and the daughter of the newly rich. Talk about the jewel robbery, and the slick crooks. You can find some good lobby and stunt features in the fact that it is a modern Cinderella story.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ....... 8,376 feet

The Fox organization have arranged an adaptation of Edward Knoblock’s stage play “My Lady’s Dress” in the form of a series of episodes. There are five of these, some much better than others. The first episode is the weakest of the lot, the players overact noticeably and the photography is very poor. The next is an improvement and there is a Russian episode which is the best. In its present form the picture is altogether too long but careful cutting will remedy this.

Marc McDermott and Estelle Taylor are seen in each of the different episodes and each time in a different character. This is quite a test of their versalilty and generally speaking they do very well.

Director Brabin has done very well in the making of the picture but the production as a whole would be much more effective if there was a more obvious connection between each of the episodes. With little warning other than a flash of the woman who is dreaming these various things, there is little to indicate that a new episode is to begin. The connection between the first and second, however, is quite satisfactory. The lady’s dress is lying on a chair and the fade-out focuses the last shot on the flower which decorates her dress. The next fade-in shows the flowers being made by a little cripple girl and the episode of the slums is picked up here.

Anne’s passion is clothes but her husband closes her account at Jacquelin’s and in a fit of pique she goes to sleep and dreams. The first episode shows Annie, the little cripple girl who makes flowers and finally sells her wonderful hair and goes away so that she will not stand in the way of her sister's happiness.

Next comes the Russian episode which tells the unhappy story of the sable which decorates the gown.
How the trapper returning to his home with the skin finds his wife unfaithful to him. Then there is the story of Annette and her husband Nicolas, a weaver Nicolas is dying and Anette works the loom but is unsuccessful. Her old sweetheart, Joanny, comes to her rescue.

The last is the story of the mannequin who fights to maintain her reputation and finally kills the manger of the establishment when he tries to keep her away from her dying mother. The “blind wife” wakes from her dream cured of her passion for clothes and she is happy with her husband once more.

Carefully Exploited It Should Show Good Results
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

There is enough variety in the different episodes which make up “Blind Wives” to satisfy the majority of audiences, and the fact that some are more interesting and better acted than others probably won’t have a serious effect as long as the general appeal is not serious endangered by this uneven break. The Russian episode will probably give the most satisfaction.

A fashion show in connection with the showing would be thoroughly appropriate and most likely draw a good crowd. If you played “While New York Sleeps,” you can say that the same players appear in “Blind Wives.” Be sure to say that it is an adaptation of Edward Knoblock’s stage play “My Lady’s Dress.” Catchlines should attract. Say: “Do you ever realize what unhappiness or what tragedy may be connected with the dress you wear? See ‘Blind Wives’ for the story of the hardships endured by those who make these beautiful gowns possible.”

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION...... 4,743 feet

Somehow or other the picture version of Alice Duer Miller's comedy success "The Charm School" hasn't the charm of the play. One reason is that too much effort has been spent on small business that doesn't mean very much, such as a love affair between Lila Lee and the brother of her room-mate. This is one of the non-essentials that lacks the proper comedy spark.
Other efforts at comedy turn out to be nothing more than nonsense.

Then again there are moments that register real humor and at the Rivoli the audience seemed to be satisfied generally, although there were times when long stretches of dry detail proved noticeably tedious.
Many of the situations in themselves provided fun,
and the star's work will attract.

The direction is generally all right and the titles contain some humor that got laughs. Those who like Wallace Reid may be amused by the part he is given in "The Charm School," that of a young man who inherits a girls' school and reforms it according to his own ideas.

When Mrs. Rolles insists that she will not have Bevans (Reid), for a son-in-law he insists that she will. But then when his aunt dies and wills him her girls' boarding school, Bevans gives up his suit and decides to run the school. Under the aunt's regime the girls studied microbes, etc., but Bevans turns it into a "Charm School," where the girls are taught dancing, fencing, and grace in general.

Elise, one of the students, immediately falls in love with Bevans, but he fails to respond. Then Elise tries to vamp Bevans, but he doesn't fall, she comes right out with the truth and tells him she loves him. Elise's uncle is very much interested in young Bevans and when Mrs. Rolles hears how well he is getting along she tries to patch things up between Bevans and her daughter and tells Elise the two are engaged. Elise is heartbroken but in the end all turns out well with Elise and Bevans.
Play Up the Title and Use Star's Name Extensively
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Wallace Reid in
"THE CHARM SCHOOL"
Paramount
You have the title of a well known stage play to announce if you show "The Charm School" and even if the picture adaptation doesn't quite measure up to expectations it may get over, especially where the star is well liked. They haven't made as much of the material they had to work with as they might have but those who didn't see the play won't know the difference and for them the picture will undoubtedly satisfy.

For those who are not familiar with the story make known the main situation—that of the handsome young man who inherits a girls' school and teaches charm instead of arithmetic. Catchlines such as: "He was a good automobile salesman but see how successful he was at running a girls' school," should go, or say "Ever know there was such a thing as 'The Charm School'? See Wallace Reid's latest picture.'

Nat Goodwin may have been successful in the stage play of "When We Were Twenty-One," but it's a matter of some doubt whether or not H. B. Warner will gain much for himself through his picture of this play.
But this isn't to say that it's Warner's fault. He does all that is required of him in the part of the guardian who tries, unsuccessfully, to manage a young man of twenty-one who is "sowing his wild oats."

But those who had the actual production on their hands have not made a picture that entertains. It is hopelessly dull and it's typically "movie" formula has been maintained to the letter. No effort has been made inject a little originality and the cut-and-dried mercenary vampire plus innocent youth and jilted sweetheart plot is retold without the slightest new twist.

Henry King is capable of much better things than this. His handling of the cast is, at times, noticeably lax. There are three characters, men, called the "Trinity." They are seen running on and off and occaionally they are noted "registering," by a shrug of the shoulder or nod of the head. The principal characters other than the star just go through the requirements of the role but that's all.

Dick Carewe seems to be more than anxious that Phyllis marry his ward, Richard Audaine, nicknamed the "Imp." Phyllis really loves Dick but agrees to marry the Imp because she thinks it will please Dick.
But the "Imp" is just twenty-one and "sowing his wild oats." He is enamored with Kara, a vamp who believes the youth is rich and when in a drunken state he asks Kara to marry him she accepts.

The Imp returns home and the next morning Phyllis finds a note from Kara which she believes is meant for Dick. For the time being and for the sake of covering up the Imp Dick admits he is to marry Kara but when the Imp is approached he insists that he loves Kara. Then Dick plans another way to "save" his ward. He agrees to pay Kara a sum of money to make it appear that he (Dick) is in love with her. But in the meantime the vamp has mar-rried the youth and Dick's plan fall through.

Then Phyllis finds out that the note was intended for the Imp. And she isn't a bit sorry because she loves Dick and eventually tells him so. Kara then learns that her youthful husband has no money in his own name and so she goes off with an old admirer who has just made a lot of money and the Imp seeks Dick's forgiveness.

Star's Name May Help But Don't Promise Anything

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The fact that this is the screen adaptation of a stage play in which Nat Goodwin made quite a hit may make it worth while playing, but the production provided is so ordinary and the acting generally so commonplace that it will not satisfy in the better class houses.
If you cater to a cheaper class of picture patrons, the downtown houses, then you will most likely get away with it well enough. It's the sort of picture formula that appeals to them.

Catchlines will let them know what to expect, so unless you would rather let them come in and then find out, you could say: "He was twenty-one and sowing his wild oats. See how the love of a pure young girl was sacrificed by a youth who got in with the wrong society." Or, "All the older men said:
'Too bad we didn't meet a girl like her 'When We Were Twenty-One,' but the youth who did meet her threw away the chance."

CHARACTER OF STORY......Wife's struggle to keep her pleasure seeking husband, and to reconcile his father to their marriage

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ....... 5,500 feet

With a story away from the general run of themes selected for pictures, and one which lends itself particularly well to picturization, "Pleasure Seekers" offers interesting and thoroughly high class screen entertainment. It isn't great or a particularly noteworthy production, but it holds the interest all the way, and the work of the star and her support is well and pleasingly done.

The outstanding impressions of Elaine Hammerstein's performance are sincerity and refinement, and she plays the part with an air of both that will charm almost any audience. There was an absence of great emotion when it was naturally expected.

The direction has had a big hand in bringing out and developing the characters, and in keeping interest unlagging until the finish. The introduction of a new angle to the plot after it is presumably being wound up, has been skilfully done so that it comes as a pleasant surprise.

Frank Currier gives a particularly entertaining performance. The whole cast is competent, however.

Craig Winchell is threatened with disownment by his wealthy father, unless he gives up his wild ways, and particularly Mrs. Clara Marshall, a divorcee with rather a tarnished reputation. Craig, determining to try and follow his father's wishes, leaves for a long motor trip. His car breaks down before the home of Rev. Richard Snowden in a small town. There he meets Snowden's secretary, Mary Murdock (Elaine Hammerstein), and falls in love with her.

The death of Snowden permits Mary to leave, and she and Craig are married. Craig brings his bride back to his father, but John Winchell refuses to see her, imagining the type of wife Craig has chosen. To win over Craig's father, Mary secures a position as his secretary, and completely captivates him, so that when he discovers she is Craig's wife he is overjoyed.

It is then that Craig accidentally again meets Mrs. Marshall. The lure of the old gay life is too great and he promises to attend her party the next night.

Mary learns of the party, and that her husband has lied to her, and when John Winchell threatens to drag his son away, Mary says that it is her place to get him.

Dressed in the finest gown that John Winchell can buy, Mary goes to the home of Clara Marshall, and when Craig compares the two women face to face, his remorse is sincere as he appreciates the true value of the wife he has deceived.

Elaine Hammerstein's name will be one of your best points of exploitation for this, and you can promise a mighty pleasing performance by the star. You will be justified in saying that her work in this is fully equal to anything she has done. If her popularity is established with your patrons, this will probably be almost sufficient, but you need not limit your-

"The Passionate Pilgrim" promises much more than it reveals. The early reels are very good and the flash backs very well handled, but after the hero's past life has been told and his present circumstances explained interest gradually fades and the end might have been reached at most any time. The trouble with the story is that it's dull. There is no life injected to relieve the listless sort of atmosphere that prevails.

Director Vignola has handled the material given to him to work with satisfactorily enough, but he might have used some of his own inventive power to brighten up a lifeless scenario. He has done well with the players, and his attention to detail is noticeably fine. Then too, his management of the first reels is splendid. The manner in which he makes known the past life of the hero is unusually effective and it's to be regretted that that part of the hero's life which follows isn't of the same interest.

Matt Moore is hardly recognizable in his specs and trick haircomb. He is 'The Passionate Pilgrim,' Charles Gerard is a good villain, while Ruby De Remer is the crippled heroine who finds she can walk after the hero has kissed her. Claire Whitney hasn't much to do as her sister. Frankie Mann is a sub-sister newspaper reporter who wears mannish clothes.

Stafford is put on the staff of the News but it isn't long before Margie Daw, a sub-writer, discovers who he really is. She goes back through files and finds that he is really Henry Calverly, the husband of Cecily Calverly, whose mother had been accused of murder.

And now Calverly was beginning life anew under the name of Stafford. Through an article written by him he exposed the city's mayor and his graft thereby losing his job. But through Margie's kindness he was given a position writing a biography of the late Mr. Cantey, whose crippled daughter Miriam personally managed the estate despite the interference of a trust which her father had created.

Stafford had a three-fold job on his hands before long—loving Miriam, protecting her from the trust and writing her father's biography. And Miriam loved Stafford. She even began to walk after he kissed her. Eventually all comes out right and they are happy.

Use the Author's Name and Play Up With Catch-lines

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Samuel Merwin's story was considered a "best seller," so you have something to work on in the title. Among the members of the cast you can use the names of Matt Moore, Ruby de Remer, Charles Gerard and Claire Whitney. Despite the rather dull atmosphere of the story there will be those who will be well satisfied with it because at any rate it is well told.

Announce it as a Cosmopolitan production and use Robert Vignola's name. Those who saw his productions "More Deadly Than the Male" and "The World and his Wife," may be interested in seeing "The Passionate Pilgrim." Catchlines should be effective in connection with advance announcement. You could say: "If you had faced notoriety and finally imprisonment though you were innocent, and then seemed to be blocked in every effort to live down the past, would you give up or fight it through? See 'The Passionate Pilgrim' for the answer."

"Heidi Of The Alps"—Prizma
Type of production...............................Colored scenic and Child's story Prizma presents little Madge Evans in a beautifully colored portrayal of the old time children's story of "Heidi." They advertise the production as the first story ever presented on the screen in colors. From an artistic standpoint, this picture is a splendid number. The coloring is fine, and the locale in which the scenes were made offers some great mountain views. The story is widely known, and while it is a very simple one of a child, there is a big thought behind it, and presented in so artistic a manner, it makes a very attractive feature. The scenario is by Catherine Carr, from the story by Johanna Spyri. It is the tale of a little Alpine girl, who, becoming a burden to her aunt, is taken to the Alm Uncle, who is her grandfather, to live. There develops a childhood romance with Peter the shepherd boy. The main thought of the piece is her successful cure of a crippled girl, her friend by pure faith. The unusualness and the beauty of the picture will make it an attractive feature, particularly to high class patronage. It was directed by Frederick A. Thompson.

"Fantomas"—Fox
Type of production...............................Serial
A number of detective stories by two French authors, Marcel Allain, and Pierre Souvestre, form the basis of this "master crook" serial. There are to be twenty episodes. The production has been more elaborately made than the average serial, and an unusual attention to detail makes it in general affect, superior to the general run of such pictures. Every essential of the type is there in abundance, and the story, while hardly plausible in any part, is interesting. The action is fast and furious from the start, with some good thrills and stunts coming in rapid succession. From the four episodes reviewed it may be judged that this one is a sure bet for exhibitors who use serials. The director, Edward Sedgwick, has managed to suspense admirably, and must also be given credit for the smoothness of the action and the avoidance of confusion in rapidly changing scenes.
There are no featured performers, but the principal parts are handled well by Edward Rosenman, as Fantomas, Edna Murphy as the Girl, Johnnie Walker, John Willard, and Eve Balfour.
Fantomas is a master criminal who has successfully eluded capture for years. Frank Dixon, a detective, has sworn to take him. Fantomas sends a woman to Dixon to tell him he will go straight if given an unconditional pardon. Dixon refuses and Fantomas then proceeds to do something that will hold the police up to ridicule. He kidnaps James Harrington, a wealthy scientist who has discovered how to make gold chemically, and his daughter Ruth. He is going to kill Harrington, Ruth, and her sweetheart, Jack Meredith, unless given double what he is asking. The formula changes hands rapidly, finally being obtained by Meredith who puts up several fights to keep it. Detective Dixon is baffled at every turn by the super criminal. Fantomas.

"Sweetheart Days"—Sennett—Paramount
Type of production...............................2 reel comedy
This will likely be proved disappointing to patrons who will expect a lot of a Mack Sennett comedy. It gets away for a very slow start, and there isn't enough stuff in it to carry two reels across. There are no featured comedians, and the two who carry the principal of the comedy succeed in making it only mildly funny. A number of pretty girls add something to the attractiveness, but on the whole it's rather flat. Toward the end the action speeds up and there is some chasing and slapping. It is fair amusing but provides no good finish. The story is about a young man teacher in a girls' school, who loses his job because the girls fall in love with him. One girl's father takes her out of school and advertises for a tutor. The boy enters the ad, disguised in long whiskers. The wealthy suitor gets into the same makeup, and then a real tutor comes along looking like both of them. The mixup at the girls' home provides most of the comedy.

"The One Best Pet"—Chester-Educational
Type of production...............................2 reel comedy
This one features trained animals, including "Snoopy," the almost human monkey, a dog, a pig and some lions. It is a high above the average for this type of comedy and draws a round of applause when shown at the Rivoli. The monkey performs some scarcely believable stunts for an animal and is chiefly responsible for the success of the picture. There is a mustached comedian who fails to get more than one or two laughs, and there are some fairly attractive girls, who execute nature dances in scanty attire. There are several pieces of very clever trick photography and double exposure which defy detection and provide several thrills when a tiny tot appears to be one minute in the clutches of wild lions and the next dangling from a lofty steepie. It is a first class two reel, and good stuff for any type of audience.

"Kuala Lumpur"—Paramount-Burton Holmes
Type of production...............................1 reel travelogue
In this a trip is made to the city of Kuala Lumpur, the capital of the Malay Federated States, and the reel is made up of views of the city itself, the natives and some of the surrounding country. Some of the footage is interesting, particularly a bit showing religious rites and preparations for worship in the Mohammedan Mosque. This part gives a very good idea of the elaborate and ornate temple, and also shows the natives bathing and cleansing themselves before the service. It is interesting to note the strange combination of ancient and modern civilization, as played by the up-to-date steel bridges and modern railways, in contrast to the ancient river boats, ox carts and crude manner of living. The queer dresses and the principal occupations of the people are of some interest, and the reel as a whole is better than average of the type.

"Ottauquechee Valley"—Post Nature Scenic—Paramount
Type of production...............................1 reel scenic
This latest Post Nature picture contains many beautiful and picturesque shots of the Ottauquechee Valley in Vermont. There is also a very fine sunset which has been caught by the camera. The photography for the most part is artistic and very well done, but there are also one or two dark shots in which the foregrounds especially are blurred. A scenic of average caliber.

"Lost—A Yodeler"—Chester Outing
Type of production...............................1 reel scenic
"Lost—A Yodeler," another of the Chester Outing subjects showing scenes of the Alps, was on the Strand program for holiday week. As in some previous Chester pictures taken in Switzerland, there are numerous beautiful shots of the snow-cloaked mountains. A little snowbound village makes a pretty picture. The snow is so high that the houses appear to be dugouts. Some climbers are shown trying to reach the summit of one of the peaks, but when they do get there they have no breath left for a "yodel"—hence the title. The photography is very good all the way.

"Sand Witches"—Gayety—Educational
Type of production...............................1 reel comedy
A Gayety Comedy, featuring Neal Burns, Charlotte Merri- man and some bathing girls. The has the shop worn theme of the bathing beach boys and girls, and there isn't anything out of the ordinary to make it particularly attractive. The comedy is noticeable by its scarcity, and such as there is, has all been used a lot. Just fair all the way.
Short Reels

"The Slicker"—Sunshine-Fox
Type of production: 2 reel comedy

Fox has a really fine comedy in "The Slicker," the latest Sunshine subject. Just step into a theater while the picture is being shown and you ought to be able to get a pretty good idea just how the picture is going over. The matinee crowd couldn't seem to stop laughing in a Broadway house. The comedy is just the usual nonsense as far as a plot is concerned, but it's the way it's done and mostly the way Al St. John does it. And then the titles—oh boy—slangy, yes, but you've got to laugh. Here's one: "They called her rent because the landlord ran away." Another: "He's so mean he dries snow and sells it for salt." There are many even better. St. John goes through his usual acrobatics and has a few new ones to boot. It's really a fine fun maker, "The Slicker."

"High and Dry"—Mermaid-Educational
Type of production: 2 reel comedy

This is an unusually funny number, and incidentally one of the bathing beach type, which have for the most part been squeezed dry of laughs. There is no lack of laughs in this one, however. Emmie Adams is the featured comedian, and it is by far the best piece he has ever had to work in. The old stuff is put over in great shape and there are a flock of new gags and some brand new business that is good for lots of laughs with any audience. It is mostly a lot of crazy nonsense that can't be satisfactorily described, but it's the kind of nonsense that everybody enjoys. The plot, such as it is, concerns the efforts of two rival suitors to win the girl, by fair means or foul. One tries to get her through his athletic prowess, and there is some funny stuff in this part when the pole vaulting hero gets tangled up with a "Passe Weekly" cameraman. Incidentally there are several splendid high dives by one of the bathing girls. A lot more good business is developed when the hero almost marries the wrong girl. This is the kind of comedy you want, so don't fail to book it.

"Wedding Bells Out Of Tune"—Sennett-Paramount
Type of production: 2 reel comedy

A fair amount of amusement all through, and several good laughs in the second part, are provided by this Mack Sennett number, with Louise Fazenda as the featured performer. The first reel is only moderately funny, but in the last, some very good stuff develops from the sypings of a detective who changes his disguise every minute. The idea of the story is a funny one, showing a married couple visiting a pair of newlyweds during their honeymoon. A good bit of business comes when an army of movers furnish the newlyweds' home in a jiffy. The way the married couple move in on the bride and groom, and a plot of the wife to compromise her husband and secure a divorce, all makes pretty good comedy. It runs along fast and while it may not be all that your patrons will expect of a Mack Sennett picture, the chances are that it will satisfy most of them, as it's a better than average two reeler.

Paramount Magazine—Paramount

The current issue starts off with a "20th Century Pictograph" visualizing the meaning of the word "determination," by means of a humorous little scene showing a clerk demanding a raise from his boss. The second subject is a cartoon by Harry Leonard, and this is followed by some "Sayings of Benjamin Franklin." Then comes the "Street Car," an animated cartoon of "Bud and Susie," which is a good one, and highly amusing. On the whole, a good number.

"Their First Trip Type"—Universal
Type of production: 2 reel comedy

This is a Century offering, featuring Bud Jamison, two other Century comedians, and some bathing girls, only this time they are gymnasium girls. There is some fair stuff in the first reel when a corpulent lady attempts to reduce by various exercises. The second part is old time slapstick, with padded mallets landing fast. Nothing original about this part, and while it is fast and furious, it fails to register principally because of the antiquity of the business. Some fair comedy results from scenes in a photographer's parlor, where the photographer resorts to various means to make the customers smile, as for instance, holding up a quart of the forbidden juice beside the camera. This part is the best in the picture but it is also very short. As a whole this is a moderately satisfactory two reeler.

"A Doggone Mix-up"—C. B. C. Films Corp.
Type of production: 2 reel comedy

This is a Hallroom Boys comedy featuring Sid Smith and Harry McCoy as Percy and Ferdie, and with Polly Moran also featured. It's good stuff through a lot of the footage. A laugh starts it off when the boys are discovered seated on a luxurious lounge, apparently in an apartment, but in reality it turns out to be on the back of a truck. There is some business with trick mirrors that is good for a few laughs, and then the plot resolves itself into an attempt of the boys to rescue a young lady's pet dog that has become attached to a flock of hooligans. Several new pieces of business appear in the chase after the dog, and most of them are laugh getters. The chase is stretched out a little too long, but the last part provides good amusement and some thrills, by means of clever photography when the boys chase the pup to the top of a skyscraper and nearly fall into the street. There is more than the average amount of amusement in both reels, and the offering should go over with any type of audience.

"The Morning After"—Pathe
Type of production: 1 reel comedy

Harry Pollard is featured in this, with Marie Mosquini, Hughie Mack and Sunshine Sambo. It is a poor number, with only a small bit of business with any real comedy value, and a minimum number of laughs. Pollard depends entirely too much on mugging in front of the camera, and some time worn gags to put it over, with the result that it flops. The effort to force the laughs on some of the stuff is very apparent that the average audience will see through it. Harry and his fat partner appear as two young men on the morning after a big party, in the highest spirits. The man keeps them on the move, and is always on the job when the two are on the point of getting away with something. The little darkly furnishes a couple of laughs when he and Harry break into a house and the little fellow gets mucked up with a lemon pie, but aside from that the smiles are hard to pick out. It will be best not to say too much about this one if you run it.

"Sultans Of The Sea"—Chester—Educational
Type of production: 1 reel Scenic

The first portion of this "Scenic" is made up of a series of views taken in the region of Cape Horn, and has as its feature, some shots of hosts of sea lions. Interesting close-ups are obtained of the animals, and an unusual long shot. The long shot is a great mass of them making for the water when frightened by the approach of the cameraman. The winding inlets of Magellan Straits, with thousands of islands dotting their surface, and the snow covered mountains and glaciers on the other side, have been well photographed and are a pleasing bit of footage. The second half of the reel has been titled, "Getting a Toe Hold," and shows two Chilcanos carving by hand, some fancy stirrups, from a solid section of tree. Their ability to execute such fine carving with ordinary carpenter tools such as an adze, a drawknife, and an augur, is remarkable, and their rapid fashioning of the stirrup is thoroughly interesting. The reel is very good all the way through, and will prove a good bet.

"The most amazing American Melodrama ever screened" is the right way to characterize this tremendous picture. Up-to-the-minute and absolutely breathless in its action, it will give your people the biggest thrills of their lives in a production de luxe in which not a single detail has been neglected. Here is one picture you can book without viewing.

Universal has done it again! Has developed an exploitation idea that will work in every town and city of the country just exactly as it worked in New York—and it nearly scared New York to death!

A series of four posters was used:

- "Do you play cards on Sunday?"
- "Do you motor on Sunday?"
- "Do you work on Sunday?"
- "Do you dance on Sunday?"

After these had been on the boards four weeks another 24-sheet was posted announcing Priscilla Dean in "Outside the Law."

For four weeks all New York saw these posters—and thought only of the proposed Blue Laws—and talked of nothing else. When the advertisement was disclosed, that title, "Outside the Law," had been fixed in their minds as nothing else had been fixed for years.

It will work exactly the same way in your town, wherever you are, whatever the character of its people. See your Universal Exchange today as to these tremendously successful posters. A complete description of the campaign will be found in your Helpbook, which is now in the mail.

Trade Commission Investigating Eskay Harris' Version of "Black Beauty"

An application has been filed with Federal Trade Commission by Vitagraph regarding a film version of "Black Beauty," which is now held by the Eskay Harris Feature Film Co., Inc., with offices at 126 W. 46th St.

The matter comes within the province of the Commission in view of the ruling handed down some time ago in Washington, relative to the showing of re-issued films under new titles, with the intent of deceiving the public. Vitagraph claims that the picture controlled by Eskay Harris is a re-issued subject, originally exhibited some years ago under the title of "Your Obedient Servant," and that it is now being offered under the title of "Black Beauty." Vitagraph has recently completed a special production of the same name, and has extensively advertised it.

When B. L. Shinn, attorney and examiner in charge of the New York office of the Commission was asked whether or not was true that Vitagraph had filed an application, he refused to either confirm or deny it.

Winfield Bonynge, attorney for Eskay Harris, admitted that he had held a discussion with the investigators of the commission. He stated that his client was convinced of his right in the matter.

Lichtman Out

Long Expected Announcement Made
Plans Own Company—S. R. Kent His Successor at F. P.

Announcement was made on Saturday afternoon of what has been expected in film circles for some time past: that Al Lichtman had resigned as general manager of distribution for Famous Players-Lasky. The resignation became effective on Saturday.

At the same time Adolph Zukor announced the appointment of Sidney R. Kent, until now general sales manager, as general manager of distribution, succeeding Lichtman. The official statement from Famous Players stated that Lichtman had resigned "to fulfill his ambition to go into business for himself." Five years in this phase of work are nearing completion and he will make them known shortly.

Lichtman's record in the business is too well known to review in detail. He has been in the business since 1910 and since 1918 in charge of distribution for Famous Players. He is credited with being directly responsible for the building up of the Paramount sales organization which does a gross business of about $600,000 weekly.

His resignation prompted the issuing of a statement by Adolph Zukor, who said in part:

"You have been one of the principal factors in building up our organization, and during our association I have found you an executive of integrity, vision and rare ability. But, more than that, I have always counted you as one of my closest friends."

Lichtman stated his retirement would be "like leaving home," and then added:

"Much as I regret leaving him (Zukor), however, I do not feel justified in turning down the opportunity which has been presented to me. What my future plans are I shall make known shortly."

No successor to Kent was named.

No Definite Plans

Allen Holubar has not definitely closed arrangements for future productions. He told WID'S DAILY over the telephone from the Commodore that he expected to have an active year in 1921, but that nothing definite had been done regarding future productions. He will remain in New York for several weeks and then return to the coast.
The RITCHEY poster always varies in detail, but it never varies in quality, at all times being the best.

Say he has ideas of a new organization. Coming next quarter.
Seems a long way off. Many things can happen. Before then.
Or before Spring. Wonder what it'll be about? And who'll be along in the party? HO made a rep with Tri. Kept costs down.
Gang said "sausage made." "Machine made." But HO kept right on. Till Tri quit. Then gang said "see?" And a couple exclamation points. Like these!!!
MOSS AND UBO
Ben Moss. Now with Keith people. Incorporated new concern. Last week. Million and half capital. Won't say what it's all about. Led to gossip. They say it may mean UBO is going into production. Threatened long time. Moss mum. Just smiles. Only been with Albce months. Say his work stands out. Buying film. Aiding anyway. Saving big coin. At rate of about $300,000 a year. Means something.
REGARDING AL AND ALLEN
Kaufman and Holubar. Seams some people got impression they were linked for life. Because of what WID'S printed.
That's what we do for 'em. Also printed something else. That they weren't. But some people have impression they are. Both here now. All about the release of their "Man, Woman and Marriage." Allen about future connection. Once and for all.
Last time. Going. Going— Al and Allen were together on one picture. One only. S'ennough.
THAT MERGER
Between United Artists and Associated Producers. Lots of talk. Here and the Coast. Coast particularly. Looks like a lot of tangles to be ironed out. Before it could work. Abrams

Price now there. Things may happen. Book odds liberal.
That they won't.

(Special to WID'S DAILY)
Chicago—Al Lichtman refused to comment yesterday as to his future plans, following the announcement made in New York of his resignation from Famous Players.

DANSENBERG.

It is believed that Lichtman's retirement from Famous Players will result in a combination between Lichtman and Felix Feist, formerly of Goldwyn. They will probably have their own distributing system and release some of the more popular Famous Players productions, including those of Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks.

Negotiations tending towards a combination in the deal are believed to be almost concluded.

W. P. G. Harding, Governor of the Federal Reserve Board, addressing an assemblage of financiers at Delmonico's recently stated:
"I am thoroughly convinced that any danger which may have existed of a general collapse—and I have never thought that danger was as imminent as a great many people have thought it was—has passed and such danger as that has passed. I think undoubtedly that the worst is over."

Still Conferring Over Increase
(Special to W.I.D.'S DAILY)
Los Angeles—The theater owners and members of the operators' union are still conferring over the raise the union has asked. A definite agreement was in sight last night.

Novel, Not Short Stories
It seems that James Oliver Curwood had novels in mind when he stated that Joseph Seiden did not hold the picture rights to any of his long works. Curwood does not attempt to convey the idea that none of his shorter works are for sale. Some of his stories are, and it is four of these that Seiden holds.

Three More Sunday Showings
Pathé has leased the Apollo theater for three Sundays more. "Beloved the Man" is being shown there. The first showing was held on Sunday last.

German Trust Reported After Concessions from Soviet Government—British Deal On
(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Berlin—Considerable interest is being manifested here over the reports that the U. F. A., Germany's film trust has negotiations on with the Soviet Government for certain concessions regarding films. "It is said in some quarters that the U. F. A. heads are particularly eager to control the Russian market before American producers have an opportunity of breaking into that field again."

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

London—Trade journals here are paying a good deal of attention to the reported deal on between a prominent English exchange system and the U. F. A. of Berlin, whereby the latter's productions will be distributed in England. The Film Renter states that the name of the renting company which expects to pull off this sensational coup, will come as a considerable surprise to the trade generally.

The journal comments on the Russian plans of the U. F. A., and states in that connection:

"Those in close touch with the Continental market consider it quite possible that the Moscow Government will grant valuable concessions to this enterprising German trust, and this likely contingency is occupying the attention of many of the leading American producing companies, who hoped to find a market in the Russian field."

Blumenthal In On Deal

Ben Blumenthal controls the U. F. A. output for English speaking countries, and if a deal were made for England, it seems likely that it would have been negotiated through him.

Chicago—Max Roberts, comedian, has been signed by Pinnacle Comedies for a series of pictures. He will replace Leo White, who recently came here from the coast to finish some two reeler. Roberts is now on his way to the coast to start work at the Balshofer studio.

An office will be opened in New York to handle the east and a member of the firm will be in charge there. With Eckles will go Richard Robertson, publicity director.

Constance Talmadge's next release, scheduled for Jan. 31st, will be "Mammy's Affair."
Newspaper Opinions

"The Love Light"—United Artists
Capitol

WORLD.—Mary Pickford, not so pretty, not so young, not so convincing as the little curly-haired girl who became famous was seen yesterday at the Capitol. * * More over, this is a "story" film. Everybody else steps out of the picture to let Mary act. It is a perfect art and knowledge that one person cannot make a picture.

TRIBUNE.—"The Love Light" is a fascinating story beautifully produced and marvelously well acted. After so long an absence Mary Pickford has returned to the screen in something that is very much worth while. * * *

HERALD.—Our Mary's some doll at the big capitol, with "The Love Light" aglow in her eyes, and in your divorce as you newly tell you she must agonize.

TIMES.—"They have produced a photoplay well above the average on the whole and really excellent in many particulars.

TELEGRAHAM.—"Not only an unusual story for the screen, but a starting disclosure of the emotional powers of Miss Pickford.

MAIL.—Despite the glooms that pervade a good deal of it, Pickford fans are going to like it because it shows their favorite at her best.

POST.—The material of Mary Pickford's latest photoplay, while not startlingly new, is good enough to make a really moving piece, and it doesn't. The story is made up of episodes, more or less hung together, * * *

SUN.—Frances Marion has provided her with a story much more dramatic than usual, and the sea does the rest.

GLOBE.—The plot is interesting because of this radical departure, and also because of its photography, which is an unusual and original.

"The Inside of the Cup"—F. P. L.

Criterion

WORLD.—The finest motion picture of its type presented in New York this season.

AMERICAN.—"For the film drama is the most gripping, the most essentially human document that has been seen on the screen in some time.

DAILY NEWS.—"Has been perfectly cast, well acted, and is provided with excellent settings.

HERALD.—Society's evil, and all the bale weevil infesting life strongly are drawn * * *

JOURNAL.—One of the most human and most powerful motion picture productions.

THE TELEGRAM.—This great book makes "a great film.

MAIL.—" * * * Capeliani has produced a story of the church, that is tense, gripping, powerful and wholly absorbing from the first scene to the last fadeout.

SUN.—"The engagement should be a long one. * * * It is a story replete with drama.

TRIBUNE, Times, Post and Evening World made no comment.

"The Frontier of the Stars"—F. P. L.

Rialto

WORLD.—A prize fight scene in a Bowery saloon into the screen capabilities of Miss Mary Pickford, and the scenes taken in Coney Island brought rounds of applause.

HERALD.—Charles Mungo, the director, has taste that is choice.

TRIBUNE.—" * * * He presents the character with that unflagging skill which has made him the admiration of many film fans.

POST.—There are, however, combinations in "The Frontier of the Stars." It's a good picture and there is the ever-present sincerity of the star, pleasing and strong without the effect of strength.

"Polly With a Past"—Metro

Rivoli

WORLD.—" * * * Miss Claire stamps herself entirely capable of acting before the camera with success.

TRIBUNE.—Polly is not nearly so effective once the scene is off the stage. * * * But Miss Claire does not screen well and the lighting was bad.

MAIL.—There * * * smiles her way to all hearts at the Rivoli. In "Polly With a Past" she does a French work, quite discreet, but still rather trivially. In her defeat Miss Claire may be said to be "there."

TIMES.—Nevertheless the photoplay is an amusing thing, and Miss Claire is quite untied to the camera. She does not lack facial vivacity, and succeeds in communicating her gay mood silently.

TELEGRAHAM.—" * * * Every hit is delightful and amusing, as it was on the spoken stage.

GLOBE.—It is really not Polly's fault, for she makes an engaging little picture which faithfully follows the adventures of the original madcap played with much sprightliness by Ina Claire. * * *

The Lion, Daily News, Journal, Mail Post, Sun and Evening World made no comment.

"The Great Adventure"—1st Nat'l

Stadium

WORLD.—Yes, Mr. Barrowme is a comedian.

HERALD.—Barrowme plays the part with much humorous art: Doris Rankin's a fetching young widow. * * *

TELEGRAHAM.—Lionel Barrowme plays with humorous art.

MAIL.—Extremely well done.

SUN.—Lionel Barrowme proves his latent comic genius by his ability to portray another type of genius—a painter—and do it so convincingly one can almost smell the turpentine.

"Behold the Man"—Pathe

Apollo

TRIBUNE.—" * * * As a tale for little folks, it is very pleasing. For an adult it is not so satisfactory, for the interest is not consistently sustained. * * * But in spite of these few drawbacks the picture is well worth while. The reverent way in which the subject matter has been handed will please every audience.

GLOBE.—The religious story has been developed with all dignity and reverence.

All other papers made no comment.

Reichenbach cited the names of some of the pictures like “Rooftop Wives,” “The Queen of Sheba,” “Man, Woman and Marriage,” and stated that the picture industry like all others was “sliding here and there” because of present conditions.

The schedule is in rotation, but does not include any of the studio's major attractions, except for the three selected for release in March. The studio's ambition is to keep the public interested in the films and to ensure that they are released in a timely manner.

No Statement Yet
No statement has been issued by Andre Himmel or Gustav J. Fleischman of the Fleischman Construction Co. regarding the plans of the $100,000,000s Francisco-American Cinematograph Corp.

Browning Loaned to Morosco?
(Special to WID’S DAILY)
Los Angeles—There is some talk here that Tod Browning will be loaned to the Oliver Morosco Co. to make "Slippery McGee." The Morosco offices now announce that the plan for a studio and number of permanent outdoor sets will be gone through. WID’S DAILY in May last outlined the plan of the company regarding this. The scheme as now announced differs somewhat from the original plan, in that the Greenwich Village will be constructed as one of the most important features whereas before it was planned to go with a race track and passenger park. Edmond Rose and Ann Nichols are two writers who, it is said, will have permanent homes in the proposed Morosco city.

The local Universal offices hadn’t heard about the above report yesterday as affecting Browning.

Is Lubitsch With Pola?

A connection with the Pola Negri contract which is said to exist with Famous Players, there is considerainterest as to whether her director, Lubitsch, who made "Passion,"

be included. Negri cannot speak

glish, and it would be almost out-the question for Famous to have de her. Lubitsch cannot speak glish, for that matter, but in dis-

ing this a prominent film man

it might be very easy to have

“The Kid’s” Release

Exhibitors Interested in Whether It

Will Go Out as a Special or

Part of the Contract

(Staff Correspondence)

Chicago—Exhibitors here attending the showing of the “Big Five”

Asso. First Nat’l pictures are much interested in the question of how the Chaplin six reeler “The Kid” will be released.

A number of them, in discussing the question, seemed to have the impression that inasmuch as it was a feature, and not one of the usual

length of the Chaplin productions, that First National would send it out as a special. On the other hand, a few believe that it may come to them as part of their contract, having received up to this time but four on the eight they contracted for and for which they made advance deposits a time ago. Under this contract

all productions made by Chaplin over two reels can be booked by paying 25 per cent additional for each reel.

As this is a six reeler it would mean they would pay 25 per cent on each of four additional reels, or 100 per cent more than their contract price for the usual Chaplin.

The question, however, is whether or not this can be done, in view of the price paid, in the neighborhood of $10,000, which, without doubt, is probably the most costly picture ever offered.

J. D. Williams, speaking for Associated Producers, has said that although a clause in the contract allowed First National certain privileges of release, the picture would go to all Chaplin contract holders as part of the eight pictures guaranteed

under the terms of the contract.

The first pre-release of the picture will be at the Randolph theater be-inning Sunday.

Robert W. Priest of the Film Market, Inc., who has heretofore confi-duced his activities to the distribution of pictures, is about to enter the producing field.

six-reel pictures to be produced in the cast and to be released on the state right market.

No Paralysis, Reports Brunet

Motion picture production is not suffering from "paralysis" notwithstanding the many statements to that effect which have found their way into print during the last few weeks. This denial is from Paul Brunet.

Brunet, as noted, has just returned from a visit to the coast centers of picture production, where he spent more than two weeks with the object of satisfying his own mind regarding the actual production situation. Not only did he discover that there is no "paralysis," but that there has been none.

definitely whether there has been any,
directors and members of the perma-

Censor Problem in Four States

Nebraska to Act
Legislate Will Take a Stand on Censor Question This Session—Three Schemes Talked Of
(Special to WID'S DAILY)
Lincoln, Neb.—While it is certain that the Nebraska state legislature will act on picture censorship legislation before it adjourns, the nature of that legislation is being developed. It is only known that at least three schemes are afoot.

The first and most promising scheme is the result of numerous conferences held by Governor S. R. McElvkie with delegations from the state federation of women's clubs. The governor, whose wife is a decided friend of the industry and who, for that reason, is inclined against strict and radical censorship, has been calling the conferences, presiding at them, and asking what the women wanted in way of regulation.

They decided that strict censorship, sought for in a bill which was allowed to die before the 1919 session of the state legislature, was not desirable. They agreed upon a bill which embodies the following:

A board of inspectors of five people, made up of a maximum of five women, to inspect and either endorse or reject all films.

This will not be known as a censorship board, but as an endorsing-board. It will endorse pictures which it favors and eliminate those with disagreeable features. It will recommend lists of pictures to libraries, schools, newspapers and churches for information. It will be supported by the state, with final power.

The other two schemes are the extremes. There are the women who want a strict law regulating pictures, prohibiting their exhibition on Sunday, making it illegal to exhibit objectionable pictures and in other ways throttling the industry.

Then there are the exhibitors who, after a poll of every legislator-elect, declared the majority are against censorship of any kind. While these politicians possibly told their local exhibitors such a story, the exhibitors who have had past experience with legislatures are not placing too much confidence upon promises. A lobbying committee has been appointed from among the exhibitors and it is on the job. A fund is ready to fight a censorship bill. The exhibitors, it is believed, will resort to full-page advertisements in the newspapers, as they did two years ago, to fight censorship.

Some exhibitors, however, are inclined to give up without a struggle, blaming the movement on showmen who have abused the industry by suggestive and highly improper advertising. These exhibitors say the movement, in any kind, will be the sufferers under censorship, and they should suffer; while the exhibitor who has been showing the better pictures and advertising them without resorting to the improper, will have nothing to lose.

Will Ignore Board
Exchangers Will Not Show Films for Approval—Say Conditions are Deplorable in Kansas
(Special to WID'S DAILY)
Kansas City, Mo.—Exchangers here who serve the state of Kansas have decided that after a specified date, no more films are to be submitted to the Kansas State Board of Review, for approval, unless Governor Allen sees fit to make some changes in the present board. Letters are to be sent to all exhibitors in Kansas advising them of the action of the exchanges, and why it was taken. Exhibitors will be most surprised, however, when their local legislator, the state authorities that a change is desired.

There was a conference recently held in Topeka, Kan., between Governor Allen and members of the board. Governor Allen stated at the conference that he had received reports that many pictures were not being reviewed and that portions of film, ordered eliminated from reviewed films were being shown anyway. Plans were discussed whereby local welfare boards will co-operate with the censors. The old question of whether the board should move its headquarters from Kansas City to Topeka was left out of consideration.

Last summer, a committee of six exchangers held a conference with Governor Allen regarding the elimination of scenes. However, it was claimed, broke up the continuity of the story. The exchanges emanations that at the time Governor Allen was very surprised, because of the existence of such conditions and that he promised relief.

There is no appeal from the decisions of the board which is composed of women.

The projection equipment in the board’s room in Kansas City, Kansas, is said to be so bad, that many prints have been damaged. Several suits have been filed for damages against the board.

Silas F. Seader of the Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corp. and Dora A. Gelbin of the Realart offices were married on Nov. 24 and kept their secret until now.

Want Censors in N.Y.
Reform Organizations in Albany Preparing for Action—Sunday Shows to Be Blacklisted
(Special to WID'S DAILY)
Albany, N. Y.—The reform organizations are preparing for action regarding legislation that will effect the industry. Bills will be introduced within a few weeks in both branches of the legislature for the purpose of providing for a state board of censors and also a measure prohibiting the showing of pictures on Sundays.

The details of these proposed laws have not as yet been drafted, but a prominent head of one of the state reform organizations said yesterday that they intend to get busy at once, and will exert all efforts to secure favorable action by the legislature on the subject of both censorship and Sunday shows.

Copies of the Los Angeles Times of Jan. 7 in which Mary Pickford was credited with a number of statements relative to the combination of United Artists and Associated Producers, reached New York yesterday.

The interview was given by Miss Pickford to Grace Kingsley. Miss Pickford, according to the articles, takes the merger report as a fact and in one part says that both groups will “all have one common object.”

When Saul Rogers of Rogers and Rogers, the Fox attorneys, was asked to comment on the special dispatch from Los Angeles published yesterday’s issue relative to the expiration of the Louise Lovely contract, he stated:

4 Shows at Once

Harry Reichenbach, who is in charge of special exploitation for Priscilla Dean’s “Outside the Law,” has arranged a stunt this time that has the gang in town wondering—just that.

He has arranged for Sunday performances of the picture in four Broadway theaters simultaneously. The theaters are the Astor, the Lyric, the George M. Cohan and the Longacre. Two performances are to be given, matinee at 3 and the evening performance at 8:30. The box office scale at the four theaters will be the same: 25 cents to $1 at the matinee and at night from 50 cents to $1.50. Special music will be provided at each of the theaters and when the four showings close around 11 Sunday night the picture will be taken off Broadway. All seats are reserved for both performances.

Swanson Features

Film circles here are considerably interested in reports drifting in from Chicago that Gloria Swanson may become a star for Asso. First Natl. Pictures, Inc., making her own productions.

Miss Swanson has a contract with Lasky, but it is said that some of the terms were so onerous to her that she was not anxious to continue.

She has appeared in a number of big DeMille features.

An effort was made to reach Walter Wanger, general production manager for Famous Players yesterday for a statement. He could not be reached, however.

At the hour of going to press, no word had been received from Miss Swanson on the coast regarding the matter.

The subject was discussed at the A. M. P. A. luncheon at noon yesterday, a special meeting was held at five o’clock last night and as a result a number of sub-committees were appointed to aid in the Greater New York drive for the Hoover Relief fund.

The meeting held at the Capitol theater last night resulted in the appointment of the following committees:

the subject of what the two organizations stood for.
We'll all have one common object and that is to give the world good pictures and to develop the highest artistic forms possible, whether we make great fortunes or not.
"In fact, every member of both organizations has been offered large sums to quit the game, or go over to some other company, but we're all firm. We don't want the fat of picture making tied up. We don't any of us believe that pictures can be made like machines."

Miss Pickford stated that any artist who made a good picture would find that picture kindly welcome on the United-Associated program. She said it was likely, in fact, that one or two famous stars and directors might be added to the organization within the next few months.

"I'm told," said Miss Pickford, "by Mr.
Abrams that our method of production and release costs less than that of most other film concerns. We have been very successful. And," she added, "if either Douglas Fairbanks or myself makes a bad picture, we'll not release it. We'll burn it up—or send it to Russia! There's been a good deal of malicious propaganda against our organization, the United Artists, from what source I do not know, but I don't think it has hurt us. As I said before, our one object is to furnish the entertainment world with good pictures."

ever worked before, for pictures or for anything else. The nearest ap-proach to it was when Fox showed "While New York Sleeps" at two Broadway theaters recently.

At the time the Fox offices got busy and lined up a lot of old show-men who swore by everything that it was the first time any attraction played two theaters, day and date, on Broadway.

Reichenbach repeated the sign painting stunt on Broadway yesterday and attracted a goodly crowd. He has placed lobby displays in connection with the Sunday showings in 11 Shubert houses on Broadway and several more on the side streets. These displays appear both outside the theater and inside.

New York will be considerably sur-

Arrow to Operate Local Empire State Exchange—New Company Formed

W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow Film, stated yesterday that a new company, owned by himself, had been formed with the single purpose of doing an exchange business in Greater New York. The name of the organization is Arrow Exchange, Inc., and it will conduct an exchange serving Northern New Jersey and Greater New York. The office of the Empire State Film Corp., formerly owned by Arthur G. Whyte, has been taken over in its entirety by the Arrow Exchanges, Inc., who will retain the same offices and continue the distribution of all films which were the property of the Empire State. The personnel of Arrow Exchanges, Inc., is W. E. Shallenberger, president, W. Ray Johnson, treasurer, and E. R. Champion, vice-president, and general manager who will manage the exchange.

Arrow Exchanges, Inc., is a distinctly separate company, having no connection whatsoever with the Arrow Film Corp.

Whyte will spend his time in the future in the Albany and Buffalo offices of Empire State Film, since the Arrow deal was for the local exchange only.

This is the deal hinted at in yesterday’s issue.

Crandall of Washington Opposed to Non-Theatrical Showing Films

-Written Frederick Elliott

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Washington—Harry Crandall, who is now in Chicago attending the First National meetings, has written to Frederick H. Elliott of the National Association, pointing out what he thinks is a "menace" to the picture business. He refers to the release of pictures by non-theatrical organizations, such as churches and clubs.

The same letter has also been forwarded to Sydney S. Cohen of the M. P. T. and read:

"One of the greatest menaces, as I see it, to the future of the motion picture industry, and to the future of motion picture production also to both producer and exhibitor than censorship on Sunday closing, is the furnishing of shows to non-theatrical organizations, such as churches, clubs, etc."

"In the first place, many of these organizations pay no taxes, while the exhibitor has anywhere from 10 to 14 taxes to pay. In addition to that in this day we cannot command congregations or members to attend their shows as against the picture theater, and even if they do they have a very moderate number. There is also a tendency to cut down the business of the theater that may be in their neighborhood, and not even that; Frank L. Newwally just put his own business.

The producer's first thought may be that he will benefit by this and let the exhibitor worry. In this I assure you he is wrong, for the reason that these accounts are usually furnished at a very reasonable rental, and it continues, the exhibitor will have to have a reduction in their service that will more than offset the cost and to make these non-theatrical. Eventually the exhibitor may have to go out of business, but while he does so or not, you will find these exhibitors and other organizations will make such money out of the picture business that they will decide to produce their own pictures, and this is the cause which the major factor will be hurt, and after all why should churches and other organizations be engaged in such a mammoth enterprise as this non-theatrical. Certainly the exhibitors will have to cut down their business but until the financial position of the church and other organizations.

More "Big Fives"

There are some more "Big Fives" developing in the business. The Picture will distribute in 1921 a series of five Clara Kimball Young pictures as the "Big Five." The first is "Harvest," to be followed by "Straight From Paris," "Charge It," "Try and Get It," and "Fascinating Lucille from Manhattan.

L. J. has a "Five Stars" series of pictures in which he is being used in connection with his star series composed of pictures with Elaine Hammerstein, Conway Tearle, Emme Greerde, Martha Mansfield and Owen Moore.

Special Showing for "The Kid"

"The Kid" will be included on the program of the subscription benefit which is to be given at the Grand Union Hall on Jan. 21st, by the National Board of Review for the working fund of the Children's Department.

Casey Here from Boston

John M. Casey, attached to the office of the Mayor of Boston, is at the Astor. He is here to confer with producing companies relative to the types of pictures shown around Boston.

New House Organ

Associated First National Pictures, Inc., announces the launching of a new house organ, "First National Franchise." Casey elected issue whose pages will be the same as the standardized trade papers, will be dated Jan. 15. The paper is to be circulated monthly.

an—Marriage" offers much to interest the eye. But whether it gets to your heart is another story. Cut from its present form, and tightened up it may. But it is a serious question whether the actual story, heightened as it is by innumerable excursions into the past showing woman dominated and broken by man, the master, has that heart interest so necessary to make a production of this extent the tremendous success its financial undertaking should justify. Certainly Holubar and Al Kaufman, the producer, have spared nothing. Reported that it cost close to half a million in the making, it surely shows tremendous profligacy in expenditure all the way through. Some of the sets, flushed for but a moment, represent tremendous costs.

Tremendously Spectacular But Lacks Big Heart Interest.

That's the film’s most graphic newsmaker. It shows a woman lifted from brute domination by a knight, where he rides cap-a-pie into the castle and places her bodily on his horse, galloping away; the battle of the Amazons which is going to produce the greatest thrill of the production;
and that where a Christian slave girl awakens in the Emperor Constantine, the desire to have Rome become Christianized through the ennobling influence of love. Then there is a wild orgy where Dorothy Phillips becomes disgusted with her politician husband and leaves him. This is a tremendous setting, with a dance on the table by half naked participants that is sure to be talked about. All through can be seen the desire to do, to present what was in the director’s mind, without regard to cost.

But even so the heart interest never quickens. Except at the very end, where, love triumphant, and faith retrieved, the husband awakes to the realization of his wife’s good, and her true worth, and returns to her, after serving a term in prison, is there little to stir to emotions. The finish gives a thrill, the Prizma effect being particularly worth while.

Much needs to be done with the production to make it "right." It needs judicious pruning and cutting.
There are too many interruptions to the thread of the story by cutting back into ancient history. These could easily be cut down to flashes; some might be eliminated entirely. By doing this the heart interest might be quickened. And this is surely what the production needs.

An excellent cast helps immensely. Miss Phillips deniably gives the best performance of her career and at times is immense. James Kirkwood is virile and strong as the loving husband, the scheming politician and the man, in the end awakened to his wife’s influence and love. J. Barney Sherry is good as the political boss and Ralph Lewis, as Dorothy’s father, gives a stern, true performance.

Bank on the Women Liking This and Play It Up Accordingly.

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor.

Play up the spectacular touches of this and you can get it over.
Holubar has spent a fortune in doing this and it shows. Talk about the Battle of the Amazons. It is one of the most spectacular sequences you have ever seen. Build up your campaign on the fact that the picture shows the triumph of a good woman over all other adversities. That is sure to get your women in. And once you do that the rest is easy. You will have to depend entirely on these two points—the spectacular end of the production and the conflict between evil forces and the wife, and how, in the end, the wife wins out. But these two points should be sufficient.

It offers many opportunities for special exploitation, especially among cubwomen and mothers’ organizations, and your appeal to them should be strong.

Dorothy Phillips may be remembered for her work in "The Heart of Humanity," and so may Holubar, and if so talk about them. Kirkwood is also known to your people. He has done some very good work lately and should be an asset.

Catchlines might be used, but it would seem better to build your exploration along other lines. You can, however, talk about it as one of the biggest spectacles offered in pictures.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION..... About 6,000 feet

Your crowd is going to like "Sowing the Wind" if they cut it and get the titles right. This will probably be done, as those shown at Chicago were scratch titles, and often obviously impossible to pass police or censor boards.

When this play was produced many years ago by Charles Frohman with Henry Miller and Viola Allen in the leading roles it was a sensation. John Stahl has in a way ignored much of the original play, but even so there is a strong, stirring drama offered which is sure to be liked by the average crowd. There are several splendid dramatic scenes which are going to be remembered for a long time. Especially is this true of the early reels when Myrtle Stedman domi-ninates the screen. As Baby Brabant, a woman of the town, the hostess at a gambling palace, trying to save her daughter from the crowd with which she associates, and to keep from her child the very fact that she is her mother, Miss Stedman's work stands out clean and fine cut. You forget Anita Stewart is the star in Miss Stedman's excellent performance.

The continuity is bad. Things "just happen" and that's all. There are a number of such spots, and at one place it is hard to determine whether here James Morrison is the son of Ralph Lewis, or whether Lewis is just his guardian. Another spot shows Morrison meeting Anita in a train, evidently falling in love with her, and then they jump a year and a title says they are in love and that Anita is now a Broadway star.
It is never made clear, incidentally, why Josef Swickard, the gambler, demands that Anita visit his gambling place and become a habituee. Baby Brabant was Swickard's mistress, but after her death nothing is made clear as to the hold he should have over Anita, her daughter.

Despite these slips, however, the story is so strong that it will get over. It tells of how Ralph Lewis, soured by his experience in life with an actress, advises his ward to play with his sweetheart, Anita, but not to marry her, and to return to him "alone." In the end he discovers that Anita is his own daughter and is fearful that Morrison had carried out his suggestion. But Morrison had not, and so all ends happily.

An excellent cast aids Miss Stewart. Lewis is fine as the guardian and while Wm. V. Mong overacts at times his work stands out as a forgetful old crony.
Morrison is good as the hero and Swickard excellent.
Miss Stedman's characterization has been mentioned.

Star's Supporters Sure to Like Her in This

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You have a fine title here, and it is sure to get them in, especially if Anita Stewart is liked in your territory. It was one of the greatest dramas offered years ago and is still powerful enough to more than stand out among the modern screen plays. You need have no fear of this, especially if it is cut and titles that will not shock are used, as they probably will be. But it will be well to look this over to make sure.

Talk about Miss Stewart's characterization as one of the best she has ever given, and also, for the benefit of your women patrons, say something about her gorgeous clothes.

"For catchlines something like this line: "He 'Sowed the Wind' but almost reaped a whirlwind. See what happened at the blank theater.'"

You can use the names of any of the supporting cast
if they are known to your people. Especially point out the work of Myrtle Stedman. She deserves it.

“The Kid” is a knockout.

That’s all. This tells the story in a nutshell. You could go on and rave about it in various ways and fill a small book about it. All you need to know is to go back and read the first paragraph of this.

If you don’t get this—even at the high price at which it will be issued—it’s your own funeral. First, because it’s something different than the famous comedian has ever attempted, and second, because it’s all there any way you look at it.

Chaplin never registered the pathos, nor caused the chunks in your throat as he does in this. And he has rarely made you laugh more heartily. Once in a while he slips into slapstick stuff, but as a rule this is happily missing, and there are some touches that make you forget it’s a comedy. And this only accentuates the laughs when they come. There are a lot of them, too.

The story is there with a wallop. A little waif, abandoned by its mother, is finally taken up by Charlie because he can’t lose him, try as hard as he does. All the hokum is there showing how Charlie takes care of him, in the end the kid being returned to his mother who is now a famous singer. How Charlie takes to the little one, protects and raises him and finally fights off the county officials who would take the youngster to the county orphanage, and how, in the end, the youngster goes to his mother, only to be followed by Charlie, makes up the plot. But this synopsis cannot begin to do justice to the innumerable bits of real humor, of real comedy; that, interspersed as they are, contribute to making this one of the greatest pictures
you ever had a chance to book.

Little Jackie Coogan is “The Kid.” A newcomer with a real personality, he is immense. Edna Purviance has a mighty good part, and Charlie—well, he is the same old irresistible laugh maker that he has always been.

Tell ’Em It’s the Best Picture Ever Made By The World’s Greatest Comedian—It Is.

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You’ve never had a Chaplin like this. You’ve had mighty few chances to get a picture made by anyone that will outclass this as a box office bet. It’s a long time since you’ve had one from Charlie. But this was well worth waiting for. It contains everything that constitutes a box office attraction. A human story, full of comedy and pathos, with the world’s most famous comedian at his best, and a youngster that your women folk are going “to love.”

Hit on high on your promises. You can’t go wrong on this. Play it up to a fare-you-well and then some.
Get them in. That’s all. It’ll do the rest. And it will stimulate Chaplin’s stuff from the fan view for a long time to come.

The picture is said to have cost Asso. First National $800,000, so it is going to come to you at a price that may make you hesitate. But it’s there. And it isn’t going to do your house any good to let the other fellow get this.

You don’t get a flock of pictures of this type. So land this one. You shouldn’t need catchlines for Chaplin. But if you do, tell them it’s the greatest picture he ever made, and don’t overlook talking about Jackie Coogan, “The Kid.”

"If at first you don’t succeed, etc.," seems to have been taken to heart by Mary Pickford and after her not altogether successful attempt at a character part in “Suds,” she has tried it again in “The Love Light,” this time surrounded by more sympathetic circumstances and while the story itself may strike some as untimely, still it provides a splendidly suited atmosphere.

Good For An Extended Run. Ought To Keep The Cashier Busy.

There’s little doubt as to the box office value of this picture. If you can secure a booking of “The Love Light,” you will have little trouble in making the money come your way. And you can best do this by an extended run for they’ll all want to see Mary’s latest. You can make promises too for they’re going to like this one. You can tell them that the star again plays a character part but is surrounded by circumstances that compel sympathy.

The idea of the German spy theme being resurrected may not sound appealing but you’ll have to see “The Love Light” to be convinced that it isn’t as harsh as it may sound. The direction which is credited to Frances Marion is excellent and a Griffith-like artistic sense is noticeable throughout the production. Both Charles Roscher and Jules Cronjager should share equal honors for their part of the picture’s satisfaction for the photography is the best of the pictures seen most recently on Broadway. The lightings are soft and there is a beautiful shot of a lighthouse at night, casting its light on the waters, the rays of the light playing on one huge wave as it rolls to the shore.

Angela, the little Italian girl bids good-bye to her second brother, and the youngest, as he goes off to join the troops. Then comes the news that her older brother has been killed. Giovanni, who loves Angela, tries to comfort her and then he, too, is called. Left alone Angela is made keeper of the lighthouse. Comes Joseph, who says he is an American—a deserter.

They are later secretly married. One night he has Angela flash him a “love” signal from the tower. The next morning a native ship, returning with wounded soldiers is reported as having been destroyed at midnight—the hour of Angela’s signal.

Angela steals chocolate from Tony for Joseph to take with him. When she returns to her home she hears Joseph murmur “Gott Mit Uns” in his sleep and the truth dawns on her—her husband is a German spy. Tony traces the thief to Angela’s home and accuses her. First she denies it but when they tell her her brother was on the destroyed ship she remembers her signal and realizes that it sent her brother to death. She gives up her husband though he swears he loves her. He breaks away from his jailors and jumps off a cliff and is killed. Later with her baby and Joseph’s Angela is happy with her old sweetheart Giovanni who returns blind.

Talk about the production itself. Promise them a picture beautiful to look at. You won’t go wrong on this. They’ll agree with you that it’s the prettiest thing they’ve seen recently. Mention the photography. It plays no small part in the picture’s success. Catchlines and stills will draw them but they won’t be needed. You could promise a refund and feel sure no one would ask for it.

CHARACTER OF STORY.......Youth whose ambition is to be a successful playwright writes

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... About 6,000 feet

There's nothing either in story or production in "Lure of Youth" to warrant calling it anything but an ordinary program picture. It is an adaptation of Luther Reed's original novel and the scenario was written by Mr. Reed. It might well satisfy as a novel but the situation of the actress-vamp and the innocent youth has already been told so many times in pictures that it no longer holds interest.

The production is ordinary except that every opportunity to paint a vivid picture of theatrical high life and the wild parties of the gay white way are taken advantage of and they go into it for all it's worth. It's the sort of thing that goes well in some small com-unities where the only knowledge of Broadway is what they imagine, what they read and see in pictures.
"Lure of Youth" doesn't differ from a lot of other pictures of its kind except that Florentine, the actress, is not really as bad as she is painted and in the end she gives it up to marry the man who has stuck to her through it all. Cleo Madison is well cast as Florentine, while Gareth Hughes is the youthful dramatist. William Conklin is Florentine's sincere admirer who is like a bad penny. He makes his appearance in nearly every scene—and when you least epect it.

Florentine Fair, famous actress, still persists that she doesn't want to become Mrs. Morton Mortimer, but the gentlemen hangs on just the same and sends Florentine to a town where there isn't even a trolley car, to spend the summer. In this town is Roger Dent, whose life ambition is to become a successful dramatist. Florentine becomes greatly interested in the youth's ambition to write but her offer of assistance is looked upon as merely a trap to ensnare the boy by his folks and the townspeople.

Eventually, however, Roger decides for himself and accepts the actress' plan to take him to the city where he will have a better chance to make good. But Roger is still told that he will have to see more of life before he can write about it. Florentine still sees in the youth, a genius. The boy believes his benefactress is a "angel" as he calls her, but in a flippant moment Florentine does something which brings about his disillusionment and he returns to his home.

He writes another play based on his experience and calls it "The Awakening." It is produced and proves a success. Roger then asks Florentine to marry him but she says it cannot be. Later she plans to marry Mortimer who had remained faithful to her through it all.

Use On Double Feature Day Or Secure Good Short Reels To Accompany It.

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

In transient houses or small communities where Broadway life in pictures appeals to them since it's the nearest they get to it, "Lure of Youth" will probably go over very nicely. However, in first class houses, where folks expect to find real pleasant entertainment of a happy, realistic atmosphere, this production won't give satisfaction.

And the story doesn't contain anything new to talk about so it's a question whether or not to use Luther Reed's name. The cast doesn't contain names that will get them in unless Cleo Madison is remembered.
It won't do to make any promises in connection with it, so if you have a double feature day you might work it in then. Catchlines will do to give them an idea of the story.

THE story of "The Last of the Mohicans" is too well known to need retelling for the purpose of this review. To the many who have read James Fenimore Cooper's romance, Mr. Tourneur's motion picture will bring an added pleasure, and to those who have not, the picture should appeal as an exciting adventure into an adventurous period of American history with which one will be glad to be acquainted. To both divisions of its audience, the picture should come as something fresh. For in many ways the screen story is new and decorative of the book on which it is based.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... 8,500 feet

In his production of Winston Churchill's novel, Albert Capellani has kept the church atmosphere uppermost all the time and the scriptures are quoted at frequent intervals. The production given the story is thoroughly adequate and will be liked for its dramatic moments which are well handled and finely acted.

However, director Capellani seems to have found it a difficult thing to get into his story. There are at least three sides to it. There is Eldon Parr, banker and his associates, who make their wealth by trodding on the poor; there's Richard Garvin, who is one of Parr's victims, and then there is Kate Marcy, who is also a victim of Parr's though in a different way. There is a flash of Parr, a short bit showing his household of Garvins and again they show you Kate. For the time being the spectator is apt to be "lost" because so far they are unable to make the connection.

Eldon Parr, a banker, with two other men, one a department store owner and the other who practically owns all the tenements in the Dalton St. section of the town of Bremerton, are the "pillars" of St. John's, a fashionable church, catering to the rich. Eldon Parr learns that his son is about to marry Kate Marcy, a shop girl. Parr goes to Kate and makes her believe that by marrying his son she would ruin his life and so she goes away. The younger Parr denounces his father's act and goes away swearing to defame the family name.

Alison Parr, the daughter, also leaves her home because her father has ruined Garvin, one of his employees. John Hodder, a young rural clergyman, is secured as rector of St. John's and he also is an innocent victim of the "pillars." Gradually the rector's eyes are opened and as one by one he comes across the people whose lives have been wrecked by Parr, he realizes the truth. He finds Kate, now a woman without a name, and Garvin and his wife and boy dying from starvation.

From the pulpit the rector denounces Parr and his accomplices and refuses to offer his resignation. Parr's son returns, a derelict, and later Parr is killed by the now half-crazed Garvin, who also kills himself. The son recovers and is reunited with Kate, while Alison, who has been devoting her time to settlement work, finds happiness with the rector.

Promise Good Acting and Make Known The Theme

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

When Winston Churchill published his novel several years ago it was bitterly attacked by clergymen as criticising that body, and while the author's theme has been adhered to in the screen adaptation it isn't likely that the attack will be renewed inasmuch as the producer has catered to its dramatic possibilities more than to its message, although the latter is really a part of the picture and is effective in its way. The theme as told in the picture cannot be said to criticise the clergy or the church, but really the laymen who use the clergy and the church to further their own selfish motives.

You can promise them an interesting picture inasmuch as its theme is open to discussion and is liable to bring forth a variety of opinion. You can talk about the strong dramatic interest and promise them some splendid individual acting. The author's name should be given prominence and it might be worth while appealing to the churchgoing crowd.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ........ 5,900 feet

George Beban has made a sincere effort to do something with a thought on a little higher plane than the general run of pictures, in this production which he wrote and directed. His endeavor falls somewhat short of its aim because the story lacks punch and is only moderately interesting. Possibly this is due to the highly improbable sequence of events, or to the lack of suspense.

The general publicity resulting from Beban's personal tour with the picture, besides his reputation as a character actor will get them in. The star gives his well known Italian characterization with his usual perfection, skilfully blending humor and pathos in a manner that is certain to appeal. The direction is generally good.

At the start Beban, as Lupino Delchini, is working behind the lunch counter of Gus Koppel. When a starving cripple comes in to beg for food Koppel is about to kick him out when Delchini interferes, buys
the man a meal and quits his job in disgust at his boss.

The supposed cripple turns out to be Clyde Hartley, a Federal Officer, looking for evidence against Koppel and his wife, who are conducting a school for pickpockets in their basement. The pupils in the school are immigrant orphans adopted by the Koppels.

Hartley, appreciating the worth of the Italian who lost his job in his cause, secures him the job of dog-catcher. Meantime, to the bureau where the little orphans are sent for adoption come two little Belgians.
One is adopted by the Koppels, but he escapes that night and is found by Delchini, who adopts him. As time goes on the Italian's love for the boy becomes his one passion.

Then there comes a widowed mother from Belgium, seeking her child whom she has learned was sent to America. Inquiries show that Mme Charlotte Maur-vean's child is the one that Delchini has adopted.

When she starts to take the child away Delchini realizes what it will mean and his grief is extreme.
His appeal to the mother to stay only a little while finally wins her consent and they are happy together until the time comes when the law compels the mother to return to Belgium. Delchini then begs her to marry him, so that he may not lose the child, and because of all he has done, she consents, although in love with Hartley.

When Delchini discovers the truth he gives her up and then it develops that there had been a switch made in identification tags when the orphans landed, and the Belgian waif is his for all time. His joy is made complete by the discovery that all the time he was in love with his "private secretary," Flora Volerizi, and she with him.

Use Author's Name. Talk about Beban's Role.

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

There isn't a doubt but that your patrons are going to be brought in by George Beban's name in connection with this picture. His reputation for lifelike and thoroughly enjoyable Italian characterizations on both stage and screen is established. Therefore the use of his name is by far the most important feature in advertising this one. You can tell them his work possesses the same excellence of his previous efforts and make points of both the humor and pathos of the part.
Talk about Beban's great appeal to the heart and the general wholesomeness of the picture.

It will not be well to play this up as a great big special, because it sums up as just about an average picture, and it is that principally through the work of the star.

Wherever they say the possibilities of a feature picture in Barbara Le Marr Deely's story is a mystery. This sort of material would go in a one or two reel slap-tick offering but to try and pass it off at feature length required considerable gumption to say the least. There isn't a genuine laugh in the whole piece and at the theater where it was seen, where they cater to a transient crowd not supposed to be awfully particular, not even the titles (they tried hard to be funny), got a laugh.

You Can Get Them In All Right, But They Won't Be Satisfied

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

If you are short of a picture for your double feature day you might consider this, otherwise "The Land of Jazz" had better be forgotten for the good of all concerned. Those who do show it are bound to hand their audience a big disappointment. They'll expect a snappy, jazz atmosphere and what they'll get will be a sanitarium atmosphere. Quite a difference.

The direction, if there was any, isn't obvious. No attempt has been made to get any real comedy out of the situations. The players just seem to chase each other from room to room with the cameraman probably chasing after them. This picture is bound to be a disappointment because the title really promises something "peppy." The only time the jazz enters in is when some of the "nuts" (they always refer to them as such in the titles, or as "cracked craniums"), put a jazz record on the Victrola and the "shimmy" gets contagious, all the inmates, attendants and the doctor himself, becoming afflicted with it.

Eileen Percy is supposedly the star of the picture but she won't want to brag about it. It's not what she does, but what she hasn't got to do that won't gain anything for her. Two old favorites, Herbert Heyes and Ruth Stonehouse are in the supporting cast.

Nina and Nancy are chums. Nina is to marry Captain somebody or other while Nancy is engaged to Dr. Carruthers, who owns an island sanitarium where he humors some harmlessly insane men. Nina's captain is noted for his kisses with a "heavenly kick." The doctor catches Nancy in the act of indulging in one which, incidentally, is held much longer than the censor board allows.

The doctor breaks the engagement and goes back to his island. Nancy pleads with Nina to go to the island and win the doctor back for her (Nancy). Nina lands on the island and is found by the doctor. She pretends to be a bit "off" and the doctor takes her into the sanitarium where she is cordially greeted by the inmates.

Then for a couple of reels there's a lot of hokum, chasing in and out of rooms and what not until Nancy and a whole regiment of friends arrive and find Nina in the doctor's bed. They refuse to understand and eventually leave the place. Then the doctor learns that Nina loves him and he loves her and so they marry.

Eileen Percy's name may attract but she won't gain any laurels through her role in this. Catchlines shouldn't be necessary if you really want to get them in. Just use the title. It promises that which appeals to a large majority of the present day audiences, so they will probably come in to see "The Land of Jazz" without being coaxed and will go out the same way.

CHARACTER OF STORY........Mother love, and the struggle of a woman to regain her reputation, in the early days of the West

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION......About 6,000 feet

Through his own careful direction and an appealing, emotional performance by Gladys Brockwell, Edgar Lewis has made a picture that carries quite a punch in its mother love theme and one that will leave most audiences pleased. There isn’t anything extraordinary about the production, but the story is well told, well acted and is of the type whose appeal is general.

A fine, realistic atmosphere has been obtained in all scenes depicting the West of 50 years ago, and the exterior shots bring out some good scenes of western country.

Gladys Brockwell easily contributes the most to the picture, with a performance that at times is excellent. Her work in the scene where she discovers her son in the person of the young lieutenant and other scenes demanding emotional display, is really fine. The balance of the cast, including Lillian Rich, and Wallace MacDonald, are all well suited.

The story is of a woman with a mysterious past, who lives alone with her baby in a small western town. The gossiping women of the town have branded her “The Sage Hen,” a term given to impure women. The women stone her out of town after she is accused of shielding a murderer named Craney.

To save her child from Indians she ties it to her horse’s back, and sends it back to the town where it is brought up by the Ruds.

Rescued from the Indians, Jane Croft mothers the daughter of her rescuer, and when Stella Sanson grows up she looks upon the Sage Hen as her own mother.

A gold strike brings the world’s adventurers to Keno, where she now lives, and with them come Craney and Grote. Jane sees Craney murder a man, but when he recognizes her and threatens to expose her past, she remains silent.

Lieutenant John Rudd is sent to keep order in Keno, and he falls in love with Stella. When Jane meets him she recognizes her own son but because of her past, will not claim him.

Grote, who seems connected with Jane’s early life, plots with Craney to get control of her, and force her to sanction Stella’s marriage to Craney. When Stella learns something of the situation, Jane tells her the whole truth.

To hurt Jane and Stella, Craney and Grote plot Lieut. Rudd’s death. Jane discovers that Grote is her husband whom she thought she had killed and when he discovers that Rudd is his son he rushes to save him from Craney. In the fight, Craney and Grote are killed. Rudd learns the story of his brave mother, and with Stella they are happily reunited.

Play Up “Heart Interest” And Thrills For This One.

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The biggest thing to tell them about this, is that it carries a beautiful theme of mother love. Play up the great appeal of the character of the “Sage Hen” and you can safely promise a splendid characterization by Gladys Brockwell. Tell them that it is a woman’s single handed battle against the world for her child and her good name. This is the biggest point to be made, but you can also advertise a drama of the frontier West, with thrills aplenty and the excitement of the great gold rush brought out in a vivid manner.

The names of Gladys Brockwell, Wallace MacDonald and Lillian Rich mean something, and can be used to advantage, particularly Miss Brockwell. The mother love theme offers possibilities for a Mother’s Day, a tie-up with mothers’ clubs, and other exploitation possibilities.

DIRECTOR ....................... Arthur Rooke
AUTHOR ......................... Marion Hill
SCENARIO BY .................... Guy Newall
CAMERAMAN ..................... Joe Rosenthal, Jr.
AS A WHOLE........ Splendid production and very well directed; ending a bit too prolonged STORY........ Has rather strong sex appeal but seems sincere in effort to point a moral DIRECTION..... Very good especially as to players and artistic side
PHOTOGRAPHY ................ First rate
LIGHTINGS ........... Good; some pretty effects CAMERA WORK .............. Well judged PLAYERS........... Ivy Duke and Guy Newall principals; all real people in the cast EXTERIORS ...... Some mighty pretty locations
INTERIORS ...... Correct especially with regard to detail DETAIL .................. Well taken care of CHARACTER OF STORY..... Famous actress who comes into home of happy rural family and falls in love with the father of the household
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ......... 5,765 feet

The fourth picture offered by the Stoll Film Corp., presents a somewhat different atmosphere from its predecessors. "The Lure of Crooning Water" has to do with the life of an actress and while it has a rather potent sex appeal running through it, it’s obvious that those who had the making of the picture in hand have made a sincere effort to point a moral and for this reason it isn’t likely that the picture will lose favor because of the sex appeal.

The production itself is worth talking about. The exterior locations are all very beautiful and there’s a real home atmosphere in the rural household and it’s happy family—happy until "The Lure of Crooning Water" and its natural charm caused a mutual love between the father and the actress and killed the love of a good wife.

Ivy Duke as the actress handled the role very well and displayed market ability in her emotional scenes. Mary Dibley as the wife gives one of the most human mother portrayals since Vera Gordon’s "Humoresque." There’s just one fault to be found with the telling of the story—they prolong the ending unnecessarily. At the beginning of the sixth reel the husband, disillusioned, returns from the city where he had gone in search of the actress, and is received back into his home with open arms by his wife. This was certainly a satisfactory finish but they go on and have the actress repent and come back into the household also to be forgiven. All right, of course, but unnecessary.

Georgette Verlaine is a stage favorite and Dr. John Congdon besides being her physician is in love with her and he persuades her to go away because the life she is leading is wrecking her health. He selects a pretty place called "Crooning Water," and Georgette goes there to live with Horace Dornblazer, his wife Rachel and their three kiddies. Just the fact that there is one man who doesn’t fall for her smiles causes the actress to try and win the admiration of Horace.

She finally gets him where she wants him and then goes away. Horace leaves his family and follows her to the city, only to have her tell him she does not love him, but the things he stood for—honor, fidelity, etc. Georgette starts her gay life anew and Horace goes back to his family and is forgiven. The actress soon tires of her frivolous life, goes to "Crooning Water" where she also is forgiven and then returns to marry the doctor.

You Can Promise An Interest Maintained All Through.

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Practically the same analysis as has been given the three previous releases of Stoll Film can be offered for "The Lure of Crooning Water"—first rate program picture. It would be well to make it known that these are English-made productions for your patrons should be interested in comparing the work of English and American producers and those offered so far by this company promise interesting competition.

The title is an attractive one and could be used well with catchlines as: "Ever been a victim of your surroundings?" See an example of this in "The Lure of Crooning Waters." Or, "Look out for the moonlight and "The Lure of Crooning Water." It nearly ruined one home." You can promise them a scenic treat in the locations selected for the action. You might feel obliged to mention the theme because of its sex appeal, but it isn’t likely to offend.

CHARACTER OF STORY ...... The kind that the average "fan" loves

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... About 5,500 feet

Without any special boosting, "Not Guilty" has come through as one of the Kaufman productions and it is going to get over nicely. It has a sure fire story for the average "fan" with love, romance and adventure finely woven together, and with some of the settings in Borneo, which makes it just enough different to add spice to the atmosphere.

Sidney Franklin has done a mighty good piece of work. There are some fine double exposure sequences in the early reels that are going to make your crowd feel good, and there is a strong suspense and interest held from the very beginning.

This isn't coming to you as a great big picture. But it's fine entertainment, and your crowd is going to like it a lot. And that's the answer, regardless of what is said about it in advance. There isn't a star in the lot, but the entire cast is well knit together and Franklin has handled them splendidly.

The story tells of a twin who, in a row in a gambling house, thinks he has committed murder, and leaves America to escape arrest. His brother eventually meets the fiancee of the brother who has left the country and she thinks he, the twin, is his brother. They resume the engagement, but she feels something is wrong, and subsequently leaves for the Orient, taking along the sister of her fiancee. In Borneo they meet a recluse who goes by the name of Warrington, but who, in reality, is the brother who fled from America. At first he denies his identity, but later breaks down and tells his sister the truth, prevailing on her not to give away his secret. But the gamblers whose place was ruined after the murder in New York, also turn up and try to have the hero arrested. There is a mighty good fight staged at this point. The gamblers want hero arrested only so that they may steal from him a big diamond which he possesses. They believe their confederates lie to them and are trying to steal the diamond, and the chief gambler is killed in a row. Before dying he confesses that he was the murderer in the gambling house years before, and of course the lovers come to a clinch.

Bank On Your Title. It Has B. O. Value

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Lots of good stuff for you to talk about in this. Say it is full of romance and adventure and this will get them in. The rest will be easy. They are sure to like it and you should do a mighty nice business with this one.

Let your folks know there is some Borneo atmosphere in this, and they may like the idea of seeing something new in backgrounds. Incidentally the director has sustained this atmosphere very well.

The chances are that none of the cast are any too well known to your people, so you will be compelled to concentrate on the production and the story. Go strong on this end.

For catchlines something like this: "Not Guilty!" but it took years for him to learn it."Not Guilty" of what? He believed himself a murderer. But he wasn't. See how it works out at the blank theater."

CHARACTER OF STORY........ Young husband with "get rich quick" idea gets himself and friends into all sorts of mix-ups carrying out one of his ideas

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ........... 4,695 feet

With the showing of "A Shocking Night" comes the announcement that Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran will return to the short reel field and that this is their last comedy feature. A wise move. This comedy duo are ideally suited to the short reel comedy pictures but when it comes to finding feature material to suit them both and keep them coming consistently good, they have a job on their hands.

Their version of "La La Lucille" was probably the best they turned out during their feature sojourn but the last couple, including their final feature "A Shocking Night" fall way short of the average feature comedy offering. And it's because there isn't enough material in it to satisfy both stars and what there is of it would have made a first rate two reeler but it had to be a feature and so there is an endless lot of padding and "in and out" stuff that threatens to make you dizzy. Then too, each trick they take a whack at is kept up so long that it loses whatever effect it may have had at first.

The story is along bedroom farce lines and it does get a bit naughty through the titles but otherwise it isn't even risque enough to cause any unusual sensation. Eddie Lyons has the more sensible role—if you'd call it that—while Moran is the man with the "get rich quick" idea.

William Harcourt (Moran), is a young married man with fine business ideas but lacks the capital to put them into action. He hits upon a clever plan and interests a rich man from Montana in his scheme. Harcourt invites the man, Bradford, to his home hoping to make a good impression with his servants, etc.
But in the meantime the servants strike for back pay which Harcourt gives them and then tells them they're "fired."

Harcourt's friend Richard Thayer (Lyons), and his sweetheart arrive to have dinner with the Har-courts and they explain how they are without servants and worse still a telegram comes announcing the ar-ival of Bradford. Harcourt and his wife decide to play servants in their home while Thayer and his sweetheart pose as Mr. and Mrs. Harcourt. Bradford makes himself very much at home but delays signing
the contract to finance Harcourt's scheme.

Bradford also causes much embarrassment to Thayer's sweetheart by remarking the absence of children in their home and then insisting that the couple retire for the night. The remainder of the picture is a session of in and out rooms, up and down stairs stuff that keeps the players up all night and with the morning comes explanations.

Can Be Used Well Enough On A Double Feature Day.

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This is too weak to offer as a single feature so unless you can run a double feature day it wouldn't be well to try to pass this off as your main piece of entertainment. Then again if Lyons and Moran have a strong following in your house you may be able to satisfy their admirers but at that it can't keep them interested all the time.

If you think it advisable to play it up along the bedroom farce lines you can talk about the situation in which the young girl and her sweetheart play man and wife. Stills of the girls in their silks and ribbons undoubtedly will attract a certain crowd. Catchlines may attract but are liable to disappoint them when they get in.
Some Short Reels

"Beyond The Trail"—Pathé
Type of production........................................... 2 reel western

This is one of the best short Western features seen in some time. As a production, it is above the picture of this type, in elaborateness of setting, story material, and direction. It starts right off with a jump, and the action never slackens nor does the interest lag. No ends are left hanging, as is frequent in such offerings and it possesses a finished and clean cut appearance. The photography is unusually good all the way through with some excellent shots of western country. Tom Santschi is the featured player and the picture is the first of a series of these two-reelers which he is to make. He portrays the blacksmith of a Western town whose younger brother is a "wild egg." The younger man is their mother's favorite and when he falls into bad company and finally kills a man, Santschi faces the matter, takes the blame and flies. Years later, still a fugitive, Santschi is crossing the desert and rescues an Indian dying of thirst. With the grateful savage beside him, he comes suddenly to a settler's cabin where he finds the girl. Discovered by the child's father is his brother, Santschi leaves to search for him in the town where last he was seen. Santschi discovers his erring brother in the gaudy dance hall, and when he attempts to force him to return to the girl, the villainous youth draws his gun. The faithful Indian shoots through the window and kills him. Later Santschi returns and finds happiness with the little mother in the desert. Whether or not you have used such pictures previously this one is worth your consideration by reason of its being a deal above the ordinary production.

Pathé Review No. 87
Type of production............................................ 1 reel magazine

Review No. 87 opens with a Hy Mayer Travelaugh "Such is Life Behind the Scenes of the Circus." Then if you don't know how to make a Jelly Roll you will after you see the next subject on the review. The making of the cake is shown from beginning to end and if you don't get hungry looking at it, there's something wrong with you. Another short bit shows the training of jumping horses at Westpoint. The Dimtar animal pictures show some intimate close-ups of the reindeer and elk. "A Wedding in Brittany" done in the Pathetcolor process is very pretty.

"The Happy Duffer"—Town & Country Films
Type of production............................................ 1 reel pictorial

Another number of the "Sport Pictorials" edited by Grantland Rice. The only fault with this one is that its appeal, in all probability, will not be general enough to make it a highly satisfactory offering. It is all about golf, and for any one who has ever played, or knows anything whatever of the game, it will contain a quantity of humor and interest. It is only a question of whether a large or small percentage of your audience are acquainted with the game. Some good shots of championship matches are shown, with views of such stars players as Evans, Quiney, Ray, and Hagen performing with driver, mashie, and on the putting green. Slow motion photography depicts the perfect form of each stroke in a manner that will delight all golfers. The humor of the reel is furnished by a game of golf between an old "duffer" and a professional. The duffer shoots his ball into every place but the right one and gets into continual difficulties. In better class houses where some percentage of the audience appreciates the game this reel should go well.

"Vamps And Scamps"—Universal
Type of production............................................ 2 reel comedy

This Century comedy features a group of rather attractive bathing girls, and two comedians who work hard and get about all the laughs possible out of the material. The stuff is of a familiar brand, most of the gags having been used in other beach comedies. In fact the plot of the whole thing has been the subject of another two-reeler already reviewed. A young man goes to a sea-side hotel where the proprietor wagers him a thousand dollars that he will fall in love with one of the girl guests. Most of the balance of the picture is devoted to the unsuccessful attempts of the girls to capture him. Several good laughs are obtained in the last half by old time slapstick, which is put over fast and furiously. There are a couple of new stunts about prohibition which are also good for laughs. The piece as a whole will prove fairly amusing, unless you have shown the Vanity Fair comedy with the same plot.

"Going Through The Rye"—Christie-Educational

Bobby Vernon is featured in this one, which, as its title suggests, is another prohibition comedy. Every angle of this stuff has been about played out, with the result that only a small portion of the footage is new. The story is that a hick, much under a baseball world, is put over as a man of influence by the police through the treachery of his rival who gives him a bottle of Haig and Haig, and then tells on him. The second reel is fast, but as a whole it is only a moderately satisfactory offering.

"Fire Bugs"—Universal
Type of production............................................ 2 reel comedy

Harry Sweet, the blond haired young man with black eyebrows, is featured in this Century number, and while he puts over some pretty good stuff, the real featured performer should be a wonderfully trained bull dog. The animal will be sure to get a lot of laughs and arouse admiration by his performance. Sweet has quite an original style of comedy, and has a rather more elaborately made production than the usual slapstick offering. There is a lot of trick business with a kick fire department, when the hero's home catches fire, and it is all amusing. The dog plays the most important part in this portion, and as he rushes from place to place pulling strings with his teeth, some new stunts develops with each pull, such as automatically dumping the firemen down the poles and into their clothes. The greater part of the action is new and fast stuff, making this on the whole a very satisfactory offering.

"The Baby"—Fox-Sunshine
Type of production............................................ 2 reel comedy

The Sunshine series offers an unusually good two-reeler in this. There are many laughs obtained by clever manipulation of old business, and there are a lot of new stunts which not only produce laughs, but several real thrills. Most of the stuff after the first half of the first reel is new and it has been more carefully done than usual in such pictures. A series of tricks by the two principal comedians, such as diving into the beach and disappearing in an oozing mud puddle head first, are pulled in a way that is highly amusing. It is all very fast and the slapstick is used freely and effectively. The sub-titles are particularly well done and add a lot to the fun. A thrill is provided by an airplane rescue of a tiny girl from a sinking house boat. It is the kind of comedy that is bound to amuse almost any audience, and in booking it you will be assured of a good offering. Harry Williams directed.

"The North Woods"—Fox
Type of production............................................ 1 reel animated cartoon

This one is a novelty in "Mutt and Jeff" cartoons and this fact makes it much more amusing than the average of these reels. It opens up with Fred Fisher drawing the two characters, who immediately take life. In his haste to finish Fisher has
Short Reels

"Leading A Dog's Life"—Town & &Country Films
Type of production............................................1 reel pictorial
One of the scenes of "Sport Pictures" edited by Grantland Rice, the well known sport writer. As its name implies, this one is a study in dogs, and includes a lot of shots that are interesting because they are unusual. Some of the "huskies" or sled dogs of Alaska are shown first. They are photographed first in summer in the northern woods. This part contains some very pretty shots taken from a barge floating down a northern river. The winter shots show the dogs at work in the heavy snow. Next come several fine views of bird dogs pointing their prey. The marvelous training of the animals is well brought out and furnishes an interesting bit. The balance of the reel shows the training of police dogs, from the time they are very young pups. The dogs are put through their paces, jumping high walls and hedges, and with a combination of slow and rapid photography their skill becomes very apparent. This is the best part of a reel which should make a big hit in any theatre offering because of its difference from the general run of single reels.

"Blondes"—Educational
Type of production............................................1 reel comedy
This is one of the Vanity series, partially of the bathing girl variety, but having a somewhat novel situation as the basis of its fun. While there aren't many laughs in the number, this difference from the ordinary bathing girl type makes it fairly amusing. It's about a young man whose sweetheart insists that he have his fortune told. Listening outside the tent, she hears the fortune teller say that a blond will be his ruin and as she herself is a brunette she immediately is on her guard. Then come a lot of meetings with blond beauties on the beach with much trouble for the sweethearts. Finally she buys a blond wig and vamps the boy himself and all ends right. The girls aren't anything to rave over but the comedian and the leading lady succeed in getting a fair amount of humor out of the stuff. It is a fair reel. Scott Sidney directed.

"A Barefoot Boy"—Post-Nature Picture
Type of production............................................1 reel scenic
To look at the latest Post Nature Picture on a bleak January day makes one long for the good "old summer time." It's the real thing, what the title says—a barefoot boy, and his little dog. Together they roam the fields and scowl the brooks for a stray "buddie." A clever little pup and a tousled head lad are the players while some pretty shots of meadows and streams form the backgrounds. The photography is excellent and the reel a fine short subject as a whole.

"Officer Cupid"—Sennett-Paramount
Type of production............................................2 reel comedy
The only well known name in the cast of this Mack Sennett offering is Eddie Cribben, and while he puts over his stuff as well as he can, the material isn't the kind that makes for many laughs. It depends on situations almost entirely for the comedy and there isn't anything particularly new or funny about most of these. The little kid with the bulldog and monkey who have been seen in other Sennett numbers, are in this one and they produce some mild amusement. The thing runs too slowly through all but a small bit and the situations are mostly ordinary stuff. The story is about a park policeman and his chum who fall in love with the same girl. The cop hires a new friend to play hooligan and he captures the thief in the girl's home. The girl's father then in alarm and the chief answers. Meanwhile a real hooligan robs the family safe and after some mixup, friend cop lands the real robber. It isn't up to the Mack Sennett standard, and it will not be well to play it up too strongly on the strength of his name.

"Bordeaux To Lourdes"—Paramount—Burton Holmes
Type of production............................................1 reel travelogue
The reel starts off with several shots of the city of Bordeaux, France. The big bridge across the Garonne River, a view of the busy streets of the town, and some of the sights and gates of the city are among the views. Next are some fine shots taken in Pau, showing a fox hunt, with a wonderful pack of hounds, and some beautiful displays of horsemanship. This portion is both entertaining and forms the best part of the picture. From Pau, a one hour journey is made to the city of Lourdes, famed as a shrine of pilgrims, who have been healed by its miraculous water. The shrine is shown, and several views of the church and the pilgrims' grots, where the cures are effected. The views are interesting, but have been shown several times before in news reels and others. The whole thing has been well photographed, and forms a travel picture of more than average merit.

"Astray From The Steerage"—Sennett-Paramount
Type of production............................................2 reel comedy
A new idea and a lot of new business makes this Mack Sennett number a first rate comedy. Louise Fazenda, Billy Bevan, and Eddie Cribben are in the cast and they all put over a bunch of stuff that will get the laughs. The first reel shows an immigrant family landing in America, along with one of the country's leading whisky smugglers. There is some particularly funny business when the immigrant undergoes a physical examination, with some hitherto unheard-of tests introduced, and some really funny business of a regulation examination. There are numerous good laughs in this part, and all of it is amusing. The smuggler has hidden his whiskey in the immigrant's grip and follows the family to their new home. Completely develops when he tries to get the hooch back. There is a lot of fast slapstick-old stuff—but well done. You can safely tell them that you have a typical Mack Sennett comedy if you run this. A satisfactory offering.

"Double Adventure"—Pathé
Type of production............................................Serial
Pathé's latest serial features Charles Hutchinson, with Josie Sedgwick, who played with Jack Dempsey in "Daredevil Jack," in support. Other members of the cast having important parts are Paul Stoeckdale, S. E. Jennings, Louis D'Or, and Ruth Langston.
Jack Cunningham has conceived a truly original story with its action admirably suited to the serial picture, and one which permits a simple but attractive opportunity for film making. The production was made at the Robert Brunton studios, and has been done on quite an extravagant scale, with more of an eye to detail than is ordinarily found in such pictures.
The first reel starts off with Hutchinson performing several real thrillers and in the episodes reviewed, suspense has been maintained in a manner that certainly ought to bring them back for more. Everybody in the cast gives a good account of himself and the picture looks like a sure bet in the serial line.

Hutchinson is seen in dual role of Bob Cross, newspaper reporter, and Dick Biddle, son of a multi-millionaire. The story opens with Cross on the trail of "Painter Paul," a criminal artist. Bob discovers Paul in the act of drugging Martha Steadman, niece of millionaire Biddle. Jumping through the skylight from the next house, Cross prevents more dirty work, and Paul flees, pursued by Bob. Martha disappears during the struggle, and Bob later goes to the Biddle home to solve the mystery.
Then he finds old Mr. Biddle murdered, and Jules Fernald, the murderer who has killed Biddle because too much was known of his (Fernald's) crooked work, enters the room and accuses Bob of the murder. Cross secretly establishes his identity, and goes in to arrest the thief in the Biddle home. Meanwhile the real Dick Biddle is plotting a revolution in a small South American republic.

Mystery Drama With Sustained Suspense and Good Production

"THE DEVIL TO PAY"

Robert Brunton Prod.—Pathé

DIRECTIONS: Ernest C. Warde

AUTHOR:...Frances Mimmo Greene

SCENERY BY:...Jack Cunningham

CAMERAMAN:...Arthur L. Todd

AS A WHOLE: A real "film" type of picture with good mystery element and suspense well sustained

STORY: Some of its "sneaky" business not plausible but this doesn't matter; it plays its part just the same direction: Develops his material toward good climaxes; brings things to rather hurried conclusions

PHOTOGRAPHY: All right

LIGHTING:...Good

CAMEO WORK:...Players: Robert McKin, Roy Stewart and Fritzi Brunner handle most important roles well; others all very good

EXTERIORS: Much very fine detail

INTERIORS: Adequate, all right

CHARACTER OF STORY:...Mystery drama in which girl's fiancé is proven crook while the crook is shown innocent

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION: About 1,800 feet

After watching Roy Stewart bounding Robert McKin until he proves him a crook in both "The Money Changers" and "The Devil to Pay" folks will begin to know just what kind of a story to expect when they see the two names associated in connection with a picture. There is similarity in these two productions but where "The Money Changers" had it in action, "The Devil to Pay" has it in mystery.

The director has developed the plot coherently, yet the suspense is well sustained and the truth is firmly established until the end at which time things are brought to an abrupt finish.

Play Up Title and Type of Story With Lines That Attract

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

"The Devil to Pay" is a typical "movie fun" type of story. And as such should prove a good box office bet. It is a mystery and a suspense and should be played up from the mystery standpoint. Announce it as a story of a man who was hanged but later came back to testify against the man who sent him to the gallows.

The title has drawing power and can be used effectively with catchlines. Mention the names of Roy Stewart and Robert McKin and recall their joint work in "The Money Changers" if you happen to have played it and say that "The Devil to Pay" contains as much mystery as "The Money Changers" contained action. Use the line: "You can't get away with it if you have "The Devil to Pay". He'll get you sooner or later."

"THE DEVIL TO PAY" (Brunton-Pathé)

Strong Mystery Story Carries Interest

THE DEVIL TO PAY is one of the best mystery dramas produced upon the screen in a long time. It has everything necessary to make devil and keep an audience thrilled in a hush, hush atmosphere. For the reason that it is plotted simply and admirably in action from the time the opening scenes are shown upon the screen to the last bit of film projected.

Although credit must be given to Robert Brunton, director, as the one who handles the story, the fact remains that the playing of the parts by the members of the cast is a perfect method of the entire production.

The production is well mounted. Ernest C. Warde, the director, taking particular pains in the selection of the cast.

The climax is built up in such a way that if a man can be shocked after having been effectively and persuasively dealt by main authorities, in style naturally it discloses the life of a soothing broker and particularly of a small town who commits a crime andHOSELEAD

Have Censor Cure
So National Board of Review Thinks —Wants Funds for Special Matinées for Minors
The National Board of Review thinks that it has a sure cure for ensors, wherever they may be. It is its turn to secure funds with which to try out the idea that a special benefit performance will be given at Carnegi Hall on Friday evening.

Board officials think that if special performances be given for children all over the country, the basic cause for the need of censors in various communities will have been removed. The board at present states it has 140 sub-committees scattered all over the nation who are working on this subject. The move would not mean any financial loss to exhibitors inasmuch as the special showings would be conducted in the regular theaters, only at special times and with special films, particularly adapted for juvenile consumption on the program. It various types of ningen were segregated and the board found suitable. It was kept away from children, the Board of Review holds that welfare organizations and social betterment societies would not find need for censor boards. The board plans to issue specially compiled lists of such pictures.

'Long the BoulMich'
With First National. And others. Including some sales managers. Plus some exhibitors. First National showing "Big 5." Or almost. The Walsh picture failed to arrive. Laboratory trouble. But the rest did. Chaplin's "The Kid" a knockout. "Passion" a clean-up. "Man—Woman—Marriage" a big spectacle. And the others. Exhibitors happy. At last big pictures. Lot of 'em. In a row. Say they'll get a lot of money.
But sales managers of other companies. Another story. Aronson, Goldwyn, Kent, Famous Players. Lichtman, who once was.
And others not so important. Big pictures? O-h, y-e-s. Doing a hesitation. Not so awfully big. Not such-a-much. Get some know. But, oh, boy, how they'd love to have 'em. Taken by and large. As a block. One of greatest series ever shown. This country. Or anywhere. By one company.

The special benefit performance to be held on Friday has been arranged with Associated First National, who will show “Passion” and “The Kid,” the latter for the first time in the East. After the showing the Chaplin film will be taken off to await its regular showing at the Strand. S. L. Rothafel is cooperating in arranging the rest of the program.

Theater for Kiddies

What, it is said, will be the first theater devoted exclusively to children is planned in the home of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, which will be built at 104th to 105th Sts. and 5th Ave. The money for the structure comes from a $4,000,000 gift which Mr. and Mrs. August Hecksher have donated to the S. P. C. C.

To Represent Hodkinson

A few points where we want Hodkinson First Run representation we have openings for exceptional film men, now employed, who are keen enough students of conditions to realize that our selective system offers the best opportunities for advancement and that the W. W. Hodgkinson Corporation will emerge thru the period of readjustment as a leader in the industry. If you feel confident to carry the Hodgkinson Idea to the big exhibitors of the country, write or wire to 527 Fifth Avenue, New York, and we will treat your application in confidence.
Looking for Big Pictures?

In the next six months Famous Players-Lasky will release FORTY-NINE of them. Big in star, author, and director material, big in box-office value.

The Paramount Pictures released in the six months now ending justified everything that was said in advance about them. Never before were so many out of the ordinary money-makers released in such a space of time by any company.

And if you look at the listings for the next six months you’ll see that the big ones you’ve already had were only an appetizer. Here’s a start:

March

George Melio’s production, “THE FAITH HEALER”.
Hugh Ford’s British production, “THE CALL OF YOUTH.”
Thomas Morgan in “THE EASY ROAD.”
Metropolitan production, “STRAIGHT IS THE WAY.”
William S. Hart in “ON THE MOUNTED.”
Dorothy Dalton in “THE TEASER.”

April

William deMille’s production of Sir J. M. Barrie’s “WHAT EVERY WOMAN KNOWS.”
Roosie (“Fatty”) Arbuckle in “THE DOLLAR A YEAR MAN.” Metropolitan production, “BURIED TREASURE,” with Marion Davies.
Sir J. M. Barrie’s “SENTIMENTAL TOMMY,” a John S. Robertson production.
Douglas MacLean in “THE HOME STRETCH,” with H. Ince Production.
Wallace Reid in “THE LOVE SPECIAL,” with Agnes Ayres.

May

Thomas Meighan in “THE CITY OF SILENT MEN.”
Comstock production, “PROWLER.”
George Melford’s production of a Sir Gilbert Parker story of the Northwest, with an all-star cast.
William S. Hart in “THE WHISTLE.”
Hart production, Sidney Chaplin in “KING QUEEN JOKER.” Dorothy Gish in “OH JO.”
Lois W. Brer’s production, “WHAT’S WORTH while.”
Gloria Swanson in “THE GREAT MOMENT,” by Elinor Glyn.
Else Ferguson in “SACRED AND PROFANE LOVE.”
William D. Taylor’s production of Arnold Bennett’s play.

Not So, Says Brandt

Rumors have reached Joe Brandt that several persons have been busy soliciting payments from actors, directors and publicity men for the induction of scenes of stars in screen snapshots, produced by Jack Cohm and Lewis Lewyn and released through C. B. C. Film Sales Corp. Brandt has instructed his attorneys, Keppner and Hochman, to institute an investigation to ascertain who these people are and prosecute them.

Springfield, Ill.—Mrs. E. M. Drier has sold the Empress theater to a local syndicate for a consideration said to be $15,000.

And Bill Yearsley. Then the idea sprouted. Some three years ago. What's the result? Take a looksee. Flock of big exhibitors. Putting up their kale. Got some millions in First National. Put another one in last week. Like to do it. Couldn't help it when they saw what they saw. Been just as easy to take more. You never saw such pep. All "hopped up" with what they were going to show. Take Moe Mark. Strand, New York. Conservative. Careful operator. Says Holubar's "Man—Woman—Marriage" will run six months. On Broadway. Greatest picture ever made. Not the only one. Sam Katz thinking of putting it on in Chi for indefinite run in Orchestra Hall. Has 2,600 seats. Swinger place. Concerts and such. Usually for high brows. But Katz says nothin's too good for it. Twenty six of 'em. All thinking alike. Great tribute. To J.D. And Schwarz. For selling the idea so strong.

CRANDALL'S EXPERIENCES

Talking of Crandall. Brings old John W. Remember to hat. No man in pictures had more interesting career. Get him to talk. "High finanerin'. And all that sort of thing. Victim, almost. Just like the Wall Street meller victims. Yep. True. But he fought 'em off, he did. And now! Well, just ask him. And he'll tell you he's the poorest exhibitor in the world. But his houses alone are worth a million or so. But he's poor. Keeps telling you so. Some believe it. Don't. Why? Just this: "I've seen a lot of exhibitor organizations," he says, "but they all had trouble raising money. This crowd—FN—want a million. And take it from me, they get it." They took some from Harry. Part of that million.

“Prisoners of Love”—Goldwyn Capitol

AMERICAN—The cast is adequate, Miss Compson, chiefly interesting through reminiscence of her work in “The Miracle Man,” and Ralph Lewis as her father, dignified in his devotions.

WORLD —  who, after appearing successfully as Rosie in Thespian Magazine’s fine picture, “The Miracle Man,” immediately decided she was out of place in ordinary parts and organized her own company, became the head of it and produced her own cinema plays.

TIMES—It falls in the category of “social dramas,” yet it is genuinely dramatic and its people are such as one meets in social life. It is full of “plot,” it even has “tricks.” This plot, treated in the usual fashion, would be just usual. But players, director and cameramen have co-operated to endow it with life. Every member of the cast is good, and the best of all is Betty Compson in the leading role.

HERALD—Betty Compson is displayed as a star newly made in the Capitol’s “Prisoners of Love.”

POST—Betty Compson, whose production this, does not help the promise of her work in “The Miracle Man.” The subdued expressions are easily within her repertoire, though perhaps she pursues wistfulness by way of the wry smile a trifle arbitrarily.

JOURNAL—The picture readings an interesting bill. * * * Miss Compson deserves better material.

MAIL—The picture is not a “Miracle Man,” but it provides Miss Compson with a fruitful opportunity to display her rights to stardom. Many a producer has been redeemed by the quality of its interpretation and this is the case with “Prisoners of Love.”

“Supremely great acting is done by Lionel Barrymore and his beautiful wife. The action lives and has breath because common things are stirred and swept by love, passion, violence, universal human elements, the quality that enters into masterpieces.”—Chicago Daily News.

What’s Doing

Wednesday, Jan. 26
Motion Picture Day—everywhere. The theaters will present the cause of speaking through posters, slides and other announcements to their audiences—the cause of the motion picture industry. Participation in theater will turn the theaters to children’s matinée of the Saturday following, January 29.

January 29
This is children’s matinée day. The performances will be at all theaters at 10 A.M. Admission will be free. It will be sold only during the week or within the theater during the Motion Picture Day observance.

Today’s “Thank You”

Arthur McNamee, page boy, Capitol Theater—for hustling messages.
- P. Muller—for $250 cash donation to A. M. P. A. expenses on drive.
- Earl Beahrens and Tom Wiley—for love.
- Miss Mack of Capitol Theater—sharing her office with the A. M. P. A. publicity committee.
- Dorothy Phillips—as first step to enter (she just happened to be first). Every star will be with us. We thank them as we get the irgal acceptances.
- Miss Helen Davis—for lots of help to publicity men.

This Is How We Do It

The motion picture industry has jumped in to help the hungry children of Central and Eastern Europe in a manner to do credit to itself. Herbert Hoover obtained immediate cooperation when the industry pledged itself to raise $2,500,000 of the country’s quota. To make good this effort, the film trade organized itself almost overnight for the drive and began functioning. The point of this is that the motion picture people are really lending instead of being led. Their resources are not being used by others, but by themselves, toward the common end. They are directing their own campaign through the seventy-two regional directors named by Mr. Hoover. They are financing their own outlay and will return a net fund as their contribution to the country’s total, without obligation to anyone outside and without a penny of profit to anyone within the industry.

TELEGRAM—"Prisoners of Love" is by Catherine Henry and is a strongly dramatic story, which gives Miss Compton an opportunity to do even more striking work than she did in "The Miracle Man." * * *

"The Devil"—Asso. Exhib. Strand

AMERICAN—The melodramatic psychological story had more difficulty in emerging from the screen than it did from the spoken stage.

DAILY NEWS—Top hatted Satan does soul-deeds in Strand movie.

WORLD—"* * * Provides a good actor an opportunity to portray real talent, but it fails to be a high class film play, taken as a whole.

TIMES—The joy in the screen version of "The Devil" * * * is in the acting of George Arliss, one of the latest and most valuable acquisitions of the screen, * * * But as a photoplay "The Devil" doesn't score heavily.

HERALD—George Arliss in thrilling screen version of "The Devil."

POST—He expressed, when he initiated his cinema career, the fear that he might not have a "screen face." * * * for he enlarges his grimmaces past the point of registration.

GLOBE—It will be an exceedingly popular film, for the devil (a la) is always so interesting, and Mr. Arliss has transferred his characterization with amazing skill from stage to screen.

SUN—This picture is a most auspicious omen for his future success. * * * The producers have given the photoplay a most sumptuous and elaborate mounting.

JOURNAL—Melodramatic as the picture has grown in portions in its trip from the stage, the splendid skill of Mr. Arliss in the role of the doctor makes the offering notable.

TELEGRAM—His gestures are illuminating. His facial expression is remarkable. Mr. Arliss may be counted as one of our best character actors before the camera. Tribune, Mail and Evening World made no comment.

"Paying the Piper"—F. P. L. Rivoli

TRIBUNE—Miss Dickson is not starred, but if any one has a right to be certainly she has, for she dominates the production to such an extent that you don't think much about any one else while she is on the screen.

AMERICAN—The plot is as thin as last year's silk shirt, * * * Alma Tell's screen.

department has greatly improved as to morals, and she is the usual delight to the eyes, while Rod La Roque Reginald Denny and Merril121566 is a tremendous interest in the film.

Mr. Fitzmaurice again makes evident his ability at producing beautiful settings, proper poses and alluring scenes. But the picture has little interest. It is built upon a thin and roughly prepared story written by Odilia Berger, Fitzmaurice's wife.

Herald—Anna Tell looks quite well—Rod La Roque the main man, but Miss Berger's smart folk act like vision; let's hope that this picture will make idlers eat.

Globe— * is admirably fitted to the Fitzmaurice direction of which this picture is one of the best examples.

Sun—* * * is bound to satisfy the most discriminating taste.

Journal—It is a pretty romance, told with an absence of Mr. Fitzmaurice's tenderness to French feminine sensitivity. The production is chloroform and full of gorgious and alluring surprises in the way of back-

MAIL—As it is, however, with an excellent start it develops into a weak double-finch at the final fadeout. With the stage set for a powerful tragedy, everything works itself out to a sentimental and joyous conclusion, which leaves one unsatisfied.

Telegram— * is a rich in settings and reveals amazing skill in photography. The lighting effects are among the finest seen in New York this year. In addition to these features "Paying the Piper" has a story that holds the attention. Daily News, Times, Post & Evening World made no comment.

"Outside the Law"—Universal
TRIBUNE—Those who like crook melodramas with scenes in Chinatown are certainly going to like "Outside the Law," for it is much bigger than anything of the kind we have seen.

AMERICAN—The character work is very good as a whole. Lon Chaney is a vicious villain and doubling as a Chinaman does equally well. * * * The action scenes form the best part of the show. The appeal of the whole play is to the eye rather than to the mind. Perhaps it will go big for just that reason.

Daily News—Lon Chaney's vivid portrayals of the evil spirit is made the more remarkable since in the same film he also plays the role of a good Chinese servant. For facial expression he is unequaled on the screen.

World—The showing of this production

Levey Showing Today
The first three episodes of "A Modern Alladin," the film dealing with electricity which is being made by the Harry Leonard Service Corp., will be shown at five o'clock today in the offices of the Westinghouse Electric Co., 165 Broadway.

Sol Bloom has leased for a long term of years the Astoria Casino, Broadway and Steinway Aves., Astoria. The plot which is 200 by 1200 ft. may be the site of a one-floor theater. If plans go through, stores will be built in conjunction with it.

in so many houses simultaneously marks a new exhibiting step in film plays, and the results obtained warrant the belief that in future the larger productions will be given the same treatment.

Herald—Miss Dean looks quite fine and her acting can stand; Lon Chaney is a great attraction as the villain; there's a gem thrill well turned, the tale bews to the time, though it is overlong for the sake of culture.

Sun— * is one of the best underworld pictures shown here in a long time.  * Times, Post, Daily News, Globe, Journal and Evening World made no comment.

"Something Different"—Realart
Rialto
TRIBUNE—There is nothing very different in this picture. It is like hundreds of others—pleasant, well acted and well directed.

AMERICAN—Here is a play in which the story is the thing, and a very good story it is with Constantine Binney as a wholesomely attractive hero.

World— so different from Miss Binney's usual pretty parts that all her friends will advise her to leave off such attempts at originality and get back to plain acting.

Herald—the brilliant Constantine Binney would make a borne Whitney as a girl who seeks some new sensation.

Sun—the photoplay is one of effervescent romance to which Miss Binney lends her unique charm, although it was somewhat marred by her cold aloofness.

Mail—There is a seriousness about it, an absence of the trite, and such pleasing union of plot and drama combined with action and unusually clever subtlety, that the entire picture is a joy.

Telegram—It is a refreshing light and well written little potboiler. Daily News, Times, Post, Globe, Journal and Evening World made no comment.

Will Never Combine

Says Hiram Abrams—On Coast Looking Over Production for United Artists' Release
(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Los Angeles — Hiram Abrams stated that so far as United Artists is concerned there would never be any amalgamation with any other organization. Abrams further added that a combination to take place would mean the undoing of everything for which United Artists have been striving: to keep independent. He was quite emphatic in stating this and said he wished that point made clear to everyone concerned.

Abrams has been busy the past few weeks looking over productions that hopes will be favorable for United Artists' distribution.

Three Reels the Limit

Theaters Owners Chamber of Commerce Against Longer Films—On Record, Too

The Theaters Owners Chamber of Commerce at a regular meeting yesterday went on record as opposing features exceeding six reels in length.

The exhibitors took this attitude for a number of reasons, the foremost being that a longer film broke up schedules, limited the number of shows an exhibitor could hold a day, cost more for rentals and put the producer to an increased manufacturing cost for which he does not receive suitable financial return competitively speaking.

It was further stated that in houses where vaudeville was shown, a film longer than six reels could not be shown because it played havoc with schedules and showings.

A committee was appointed to select a suitable gift for Harry Reichenbach, in appreciation of his work at the recent ball which was a success financially to the extent of $4,000.

Want Censors

Bill Introduced in Minnesota Legislature—Patterned After Penn. Law

(Special to WID'S DAILY)
Minneapolis—A bill is being presented to the Minnesota legislature sponsored by 700 women of Le Sueur County, providing for censorship of a dramatic sort.

The bill provides for an arbitrary censorship of films, slides and stereo-optic views at the expense of the state administration. It is argued that this would cost the state $47,000 a year. The bill provides for a censorship board with three members, each to receive a yearly salary of $3,000 and for a staff of assistants numbering 21, these to be appointed by the governor. The measure provides for a fee of $2 for each 1,000 ft. of film reviewed or for films less than that length.

It is practically a copy of the Pennsylvania censorship bill with more rigid provisions. Another measure, a copy of the bill introduced two years ago is also pending. This was produced by a man named Peterson of Moorhead.

"U" Fire Involves $100,000 Loss

Universal sustained a loss by fire yesterday of $100,000 when a building at 42nd St. and Ave. E., Bayonne, N. J., was destroyed by fire. The company used about a fourth of the structure to house old films. The Celolhino Co., occupied part of it and it was the company's largest building. It is estimated the fire is to have originated in the M. P. Realty Co., the owner of the building, having bought it from Universal several years ago.

This was the building in which David Horsley used to work and was one of the oldest in the east. Total loss was sustained, but the amount involved could not be learned yesterday.

The organ playing number is an organ solo, "Pilgrim's Progress," rendered by Ralph B. Birmingham and Herbert Sisson.

In the Courts
A jury before Supreme Court Justice Plattek gave a verdict for the defendant in a suit of the American Trade Association against Thomas R. Gardiner, trading as the Gardiner Syndicate, to recover on a check for $1,300 on which the defendant stopped payment. The defense was that the plaintiff got the right to exhibit a serial film in Greater New York for 30 days, but shipped the film to a foreign country in violation of the agreement. To get the film back the defendant gave the plaintiff two checks for $2,550 and after one check for $1,250 had been paid the plaintiff refused to deliver the last two episode, so the defendant stopped pay- ment on the second check.

The Pathe Exchange, Inc., has sued C. McLeod Bayes in the Supreme Court for $2,917. The complaint al- leges that the defendant agreed to deliever certain negatives to the plain- tiff from which films were to be made and the defendant was to get a share of the profit. He collected $6,000 on account of his share and agreed to repay all he had received in excess of the amount finally earned. This is the sum sued for.

Los Angeles—Wedgewood Nowell, it is learned here, will shortly form a company to be known as Wedgewood Nowell Prods., to make a series of Arsenic Lupin stories. Managerial Changes in Atlanta
(Special to WID'S DAILY)
Atlanta—Considerable surprise has been caused by changes made in the managerial line-up of the 13 Lynch theaters. Ralph DeBrul, who has been supervising all of the Lynch theaters in town will be charge of the New Howard only, in the future. Frank Hammond, former publicity representative for the houses will have charge of the F. E. Smith, Strand and Vaudeville under direct supervision of N. Remond, state supervisor. Hammond in turn will have the following under him: DeSales Harrison in charge of the Rialto; Harold R. Kjeller in charge of the Forsyth; E. F. Whaley at the Strand and Jack Flaska at the Vaudette.

Don't Rely on First Runs
An investigation conducted by Realfart tends to show that exhibitors are not relying on first runs for profits as much as they used to in the past. The company points out the number of examples where exhibitors have contracted for the Realfart series with the result that one house shows pictures that were shown in other theaters in the same town. The condition is said to exist in five distinct sections of Chicago, in Dav- port where six out of 13 houses show Realfart product, and in two parts of Los Angeles. In Kenton, O., all houses in town show Realfart pictures.

The headquarters are on the second floor of the Capitol Theatre building, Circle 4411.

Flood of Appeal Posters To every film showhouse in the country a broadside poster has been sent from headquarters by Lloyd Willis. This is a lobby poster bearing the motion picture industry's appeal to the public in behalf of the European Relief as expressed by Herbert Hoover. On the back of this poster for the exhibitor's benefit are suggestions and hints for making January 26 mean something to the theatre's friends.

Capitol Subscription Blanks S. L. Rothafel is distributing to Capitol Theatre patrons a subscription blank for tickets to the children's matinee on January 29. This blank asks that checks be made out to Franklin K. Germany Far Behind
Says He and Other Continental Countries Present No Cause for Worryment

Returned from a five months' tour during which he visited Germany, France, Italy, Spain, and Scandinavia. According to Ziehm, foreign sales manager for Goldwyn, there is no reason for American producers to be disturbed by the possibility of serious competition from foreign producers. Ziehm's statement that Germany is far ahead of the other countries in the average quality of the pictures being made, is particularly interesting.

While abroad Ziehm established exchanges in Holland, Stockholm to cover Scandinavia and Finland, in Milan, Italy, and in Barcelona, Spain. Another office is planned for Paris. The activities of foreign producers were generally pleasing to Ziehm, who is a man who likes to see the world.

"From Holland I went to Scandinavia, where the business was in very good condition, about 75% of the current supply of films coming from Europe," said Ziehm, who is on the lookout for new talent. "The British situation was of unusual interest, but not as favorable as we should have liked. In fact, they are doing a very poor business at the moment, but the company is not at all discouraged and is trying to improve the position of British film producers. Ziehm's time was spent in visiting foreign producers and giving them advice on how to improve their films.

"My visit to Germany, where I spent a number of weeks in the film industry, was particularly interesting. There had been so much talk about the success of foreign producers and the moderate costs at which they were working. I am glad to be able to announce that although foreign films were not as good as American ones, they were not so bad as some people thought. The German producers have been very reticent about their films, which is unfortunate, as they should have been more open and frank about their work. Ziehm's time was spent in visiting various companies and discussing their films with the producers.

"Conditions on the other side, said Ziehm, were "not so good." He said there was considerable apprehension among the German producers about the importation of films. The 15% clause was to have gone into effect on Jan. 1st, but the tax was withdrawn. However, it is possible that the tax may be re-introduced at any time, which would make it difficult for foreign producers to export their films to Germany. Ziehm's time was spent in discussing the possibility of this happening with the German producers, and he was very discouraged by what he heard.

"To be sure, it was surprising to find that German exhibitors are not as enthusiastic about foreign pictures as we should have expected. Nevertheless, they are distinctly inferior to those we have seen in this country. This fact struck me forcibly when I attended the premiere of 'Sumurun' and visited theaters in Germany, which showed such pictures as 'Anna Boelyn.' Ziehm's time was spent in discussing the possibility of this happening with the German producers, and he was very discouraged by what he heard.

A Ten Year Contract
That Is Term of Blumenthal-U. F. A. Agreement—Former Won't Admit Negri-F. P. Deal

Bea Blumenthal, president of the Export and Import Film Company, Inc., has extended his stay in Central Europe, stated yesterday that he owned the output of all his German subsidiaries. "Passion," Sumurun, and "Anna Boelyn," the latter the most recent to be produced, for English-speaking countries in Germany, appear to have sold very fast. Mr. Blumenthal would not admit that perceptions of "Passion," had been signed by Famous Players and that he would make no comment further on the matter. Velma Negri, former director, Ernst Lubitsch, were under contract to Raccon and himself. He was inclined to believe that the interest of German producers has been increasing among American picture men. Ziehm is a member of the principal studios in Germany and meetings with many of the leading representatives of the business there, gave him a different view of the situation.

"With all due respect for the excellence of the work being accomplished by Lasky and May and one or two of the foremost directors, I was soon convinced that the German film industry is not going to be the standard being maintained in this country. Germany, as a whole, is not in the direction of the players, being a little less strong in some of the directions and settings. Here, of course, it must be understood that I am not speaking of German films, but of those productions from the foreign countries, and pictures out of those countries, such as "Sumurun," "Lucentia," and other productions of its class.

"One of the surpises of my visit was to find that German producers are not as enthusiastic about foreign pictures as we should have expected. Nevertheless, they are distinctly inferior to those we have seen in this country. This fact struck me forcibly when I attended the premiere of 'Sumurun' and visited theaters in Germany, which showed such pictures as 'Anna Boelyn.' Joseph Somlo, one of the heads of the U. F. A., came over with Blu-

From other sources it was learned that Somlo had brought with him a print of "Anna Boelyn," which has been shown in Paris and is to be shown in English newspapers. It was reported that he is here to sell the American rights, but Blumenthal, when asked the matter, said that he had not made any plans. Somlo will remain for about a month and then return to Berlin.

—Disatisfaction Reported
(Special to WIDS DAILY)

"Seattle—The fight between Jensen and Von Herberg and the 10 film companies which refuse to recognize that firm's booking circuit. The Independent Exhibitors Corp. grows interesting. Encouraged by the local managers of the last company, L. A. Drinkwize has opened the Apollo theater in Tacoma as a picture house. And W. L. Dougal has remodeled the old Arcadia skating rink in Bremerton and opened it with big productions, such as "The U. P. Trail," "The Mark of Zorro," and "Kismet."

Before the opening of these two houses both Tacoma and Bremerton first run theaters were all controlled by Jensen and Von Herberg. This theater will also be opened in Portland shortly, where this firm also controls the first run situation and had shut out the productions of all companies refusing to sell to the circuit.

Sues for Services
Attorney Sulzberger Wants $2,415 for Fees—An Echo of the Committee of 17 Activities
Myron Sulzberger, an attorney with offices at 38 Park Row, is suing the Committee of 17 for $2,415, for services rendered. A summons was filed on the Committee of 17 for the suit, yesterday.

It is understood that Sulzberger is suing for the amount involved chiefly because of services he rendered in locating and calling upon former President Taft, with a view to ascertaining whether Taft would be willing to head a combined exhibitors' organization. It is further understood that the amount Sulzberger is suing for is $500 and that he is now suing for the remainder.

At the Cleveland convention in June a resolution was passed that all expenses of the Committee of 17 be borne by the exhibitors of the country.

In a suit of Frederick Post against Victor Kremmer to recover on a note for five films sold, the defendant has failed a new answer demanding $25,000 damages on the ground that Post falsely represented that he was the owner of the films, whereas they belonged to the W. The British & Colonial Kinematographe Co., sued the Clark-Cornells Corp. in the Supreme Court yesterday to compel the defendant to return films of "Adam and Eve," on the ground that the defendant broke a contract by which it was made distributor of the films in the United States, Canada and the Hawaiian Islands, for 35% of the net proceeds. Northwest “Pep”

In the Northwest there is a well organized movement to put the drive successfully over the top. Ray A. Grumbacher, Regional Chairman for the Northwest district, has written Mr. Hoover as follows:

“At our meeting it was decided to have a Midnight Matinee, starting at eleven o’clock at the three largest theaters, namely, Pantages, Clemmer and Liberty.

“We will immediately start an advertising campaign with slides on the screen in every theater in town. Each theater will speak in its daily newspaper regarding the matinee. We will endeavor to persuade the merchants also to include in their newspaper ads a mention of the matinee.

“The entire proceeds of the matinee will be given to the Starving Children’s Fund.

“We mean to put this proposition over successfully to show the general public that the theatrical people are really alive and will make a success of whatever they attempt to do.”

Importan Notes

The suspicions of the film managers that Jensen and Von Herberg have brought sufficient stock in the theaters of the 16 towns recently announced in WID'S DAILY to give them the right to buy for those houses as a part of the offer are string seems to be justified by the report now being circulated from an authentic source that Jensen and Von Herberg promised C. F. Hill of Albany, Oregon, who controls that and two other near-by towns, that they would buy $500 worth of stock in his company, that they paid $500 down and that he finds it impossible to get any more from them. It also resorted that William J. Ripley of the Western Amusement Co. of Aberdeen and Centralia has been similarly treated. The supposition in local film circles is, therefore, that very little actual money has been put into any of these companies by Jensen and Von Herberg. In the meantime dissatisfaction among the members of the circuit grows apace. Clyde M. Price of Pendleton, Ore., withdrew from the circuit and demanded a return of his entrance fee. After some difficulty, he obtained it. Meyers and Ford of La Grande, Ore., have also resigned and demanded their money. They were refused, and they have placed the matter in the hands of their attorneys. A number of other members are bringing all pressure to bear on Jensen and Von Herberg for a return of their entrance fees.

An effort was made to reach Mr. Von Herberg at the Astor, where he had been stopping, but the room clerk at 6:30 last night reported he had checked out.

Neilan in East

Prominent Producer to Make All Future Productions Here—Some of His Reasons

Before leaving for the Coast yesterday Marshall Neilan said that he had completed plans for making all his future productions in the East. He will probably return in about a month, after which active work will start on his future productions.

In discussing his move Neilan said: I think we are about tired of seeing the same old scenery and the same old casts of characters that are constantly seen in western productions. I know one man who has appeared so often that one week he was in several Broadway theaters in different pictures. His should not be. Besides, it will be well to get away from the Coast for other reasons.

The fact that Neilan intends to produce in the East will meet with comment especially as Neilan’s entire organization is located on the Coast, and only a short time ago Pete Smith, special press representative moved his entire family to the Coast.

4 Million Gross

That’s What Griffith Places “Way Down East” Business At—Interviewed in English Journal

(London—D. W. Griffith is quoted as saying in the special end-of-the-year number of the Film Renter and M. P. N. News that he expects “Way Down East” to gross $4,000,000. And this is given as a minimum figure.

The Film Renter published the interview as given by Griffith to Ernest W. Fredman, who was in America a few months ago.

Fredman quotes Griffith as saying: “The film cost $80,000 to produce, and I estimate that by the time it gets into the movie houses it will make $25,000,000, together with its receipts from the legitimate theaters, total at least $20 million.”

At another point the article says: “I asked Mr. Griffith if he had considered filming the most popular works of some of our great novelists.”

Seeks Gov't Support

"During the war, the motion picture industry was of tremendous value to the Government, and as a result, the industry received wisely directed Governmental encouragement, besides the gratuitous confidence of rightly informed and guided public opinion and freedom from hampering and damaging legislation," said Arthur Levy, organizer of the Anglo-American Unity League, Inc., yesterday. "We should have in one of the departments of the Government, a competent representative, co-operating with a central committee of publishers and motion picture executives, such as is proposed by the Motion Picture Division and the Division of Journalism of the Anglo American Unity League, Inc."

"No further time will be lost to create and set up machinery for planning and action, which should have been, but unfortunately was not, in existence and operation when the present 'Blue Law' emergency arose. The liaison between the Fourth and Fifth Estates is gaining in importance all the time and our organization co-ordinating all interests for the common good, should render genuinely important and highly beneficial service."

Horsley to Reissue

Horsley has sold "Her Bargain," in which Mary MacLaren is starred, to the C. B. Price Co., Inc., and will take the picture. Horsley sold some of the territory on this several years ago, but the picture was never given widespread distribution. C. B. C Film Sales will take right a series of 16 Christie Comedies which were originally sold to the Film Publishers Corp. Charles Simone, general manager. Horsley states that pictures were made for him by Al F. Christie in 1916 under a contract that called for a series of one reeler. He states that after 17 of them were made Christie and he severed connection.

The Uniista Film Mfg. Co., which was formed in December, 1919 by Horsley, it develops, was the company which operates the Horsley laboratory with a capacity of 1,000,000 feet weekly. Alongside the laboratory is a glass enclosed studio, in which the Physical Culture Corp. is making a series of one reel athletic comedies. Bernard MacFadden is interested in the producing company which has merely leased the plant from Horsley.

More Product

National Exchanges, Inc., which last week announced the distribution of the Charles Urban Kineto Review, will also distribute a series of King Cole Comedies to be released one month. This is the series being made under the M. P. Producing Co., in which Walter L. Johnson and Earl H. Hopkins are the principal figures. It is generally understood that Johnson and Hopkins are interested in National F-changes.

The first of the features which National will handle is "Get Out and Stay Out," in Los Angeles by the Drascena Prod. Inc. of Los Angeles.

Drascena Prod. were formed in Los Angeles last September and at that time the company announced that it would make a series of comedies starring Trixie Friganza. Those interested in the company at its inception were W. M. Howard of Alabama, C. M. Conant, Cambridge, Mass.; Ed Harlan, Moberly, Mo., and Joseph J. Fox.

Stars, Let's See You Twinkle

If there is a motion picture star of any degree of luminosity, who has waited to be paged for service in the motion picture theaters of Greater New York on the big drive day next Wednesday, Jan. 26, let that star consider himself or herself paged. Time is too short to utter anything save a clarion call for you. Response must be direct. The producers, distributors and theater owners have done their part in planning and financing this great, humanitarian movement. They are looking to you for co-operation—watching the daily roll of volunteers grow. The houses need you to help enhance their audiences. The committee will provide you with transportation. Your name and your willingness to aid must be learned at once in order that an itinerary may be made for your appearance.

Telephone to Bert Adler, Star Committee Chairman, Ekrowk Bldg., Bryant 1058. Associated with him are Nat Rothstein and Maury Meyers.

Rallying Point

The Hotel Astor has offered the Star Committee the Orangerie Room, mezzanine floor, for the afternoon and evening of January 26, as a rallying point for stars from which to visit the motion picture theaters. The stars will be met by committee men preparatory to visiting the theaters at which they are to appear. A sign in the lobby will give the location of the Orangerie Room. Messrs. Maury Meyers, Bert Adler and Nat Rothstein wish to have A. M. P. A. volunteers to escort the stars to theaters on this occasion.

Help the Starving Babies!

There are no personal favors to be won. No one makes a penny of profit. Show the industry has a heart as big as the world it delights.

Dr. Copeland's View

The kind of fast that Mary Schaefer is conducting to aid the Motion Picture Committee of the European Relief Council will have most surprising and pleasing effects, according to Dr. Royal S. Copeland, New York Commissioner of Health. He says:

"My business is keeping people healthy, and I would condemn a course in subnutrition, enforced or voluntary, on the part of anyone. However, Miss Schaefer is performing an experiment that ought to make her complexion resemble a beauty parlor's best effort and give her a step as sprightly as a trained athlete's. "Almost everybody in the world eats too much, and ten days of simple, staple food would be about as good medicine as New York City could take. Incidentally, it ought to save enough money to feed two or three starving countries."

Lichtman First

At Lichtman made the first donation to finance the expenses of the Motion Picture Committee for Greater New York.

"THE INVISIBLE GUEST"

Boston and New Haven—Select.
Philadelphia—United Artists.

Jazz up your lobby for the Big Motion Picture Drive Day to feed the starving children. Let the public know that YOUR theater is doing everything in its power for the cause.

Life Saver Checks

With his supply of tickets, every Greater New York exhibitor is receiving a supply of Life-Saver checks, payable to the order of Franklin K. Lane, treasurer of the European Relief Fund. These checks are for distribution to audiences throughout the week or on Motion Picture Day, and may be filled out with the names of banks or trust companies where contributors have accounts. Some of the checks are for blank amounts and others for ten dollars, the amount sufficient to save one life among the famished children of Central and Eastern Europe.

It should be stated that Chairman S. L. Rothafel tried out this blank check plan through the whole week of Jan. 17, distributing the checks to his patrons with the Capitol programs. There was a gratifying response which will swell the returns from this theater measurably.

City Departments Aid

Through the efforts of Maj. Geo. A. Daly, Adjutant General, First Brigade, N. Y. National Guard, and of John H. Love, New York State Command of the E. R. C. Mayor Hylan of New York City took up consideration of city department cooperation in the plans for Motion Picture Day. After a conference with city department heads, Mayor Hylan gave permission for the employees of all departments to take care of distributing 100,000 tickets which are being sold for the morrow benefit performances of Saturday, Jan. 29. This means that the 50,000 city department employees will be hosts to 100,000 children. Maj. Daly acted as the direct representative of Herbert Hoover, chairman of the European Relief Council, in negotiating with the city officials.

Pledge $2,000

The exchange managers at a F. L. M. Club meeting held on Wednesday evening pledged themselves to raise $2,000 for the Hoover fund. This is in the nature of personal contributions.
Standard Courses
Argonaut plans to act as a sort of clearing house between boards of education and suppliers of educational subjects which can be incorporated in the school curriculum. Tentative arrangements have been made with the well known producers of educational subjects in the field whereby Argonaut secures first call on whatever material is being used in courses in biology, industrial geography and kindred subjects.
Argonaut holds an agreement with the New York Education Association to supply courses in biology, and industrial geography. Later on when the company has sufficiently developed its facilities, it is planned to put on courses in history, general geography, English literature and other subjects. The average course will be 20 reels although this may vary if the nature of the subject calls for a change.
C. C. Dill, with headquarters in Spokane, Wash., holds the distributing rights for the Argonaut courses in Montana, Washington, Idaho, Oregon. Negotiations are now under way for distribution throughout Ohio, New England, the South, through an office in Atlanta and in Kansas City.
All of the courses for the New York schools are prepared in conjunction with the Bureau of Lectures, of the Department of Education and with Rita Hocheimer, assistant in visual instruction in New York schools. Boone is editor-in-chief of all the courses and personally titles and prepares the courses for the schools. In connection with this there is a curriculum committee of the Visual Instruction Association of New York City, an official body of teachers and professional people interested in visual instruction which works hand in hand with the Argonaut. Dr. Ernest L. Crandall, director of the Bureau of Lectures, is president of this organization.
It is expected that 15 schools in the greater city will be ready for showings of the term which begins Feb. 1. This number is expected to be materially increased later on, when the idea takes hold. Argonaut has established offices at 71 W. 23rd St.
When Argonaut needs films of certain types to round out a certain course, arrangements will be made to have those pictures produced especially.
Special Unit Formed
(Special to WID'S DAILY)
Dallas—W. G. Underwood has formed a special unit to handle the southwest federated film corp. underwood's other company, the Special Films Co., is the physical distribution of the first unit but there the connection ends. The two companies will be operated as entirely separate units.
In connection with Specialty a recent announcement states that this unit is handling for its territory a series of 26 western dramas, two reels each and another series of star ranch westerns, two reels each.
Coast Brevities
(Special to WID'S DAILY)
Hollywood—Allan Dwan has just completed his latest production.
Helen Ferguson will play opposite Harry Carey in "Everybody for Himself."
After five months in the East, Virginia Norden has returned to the Mayer studios.
Edward Lowe is back at Metro after a two weeks' vacation spent in Chicago with his family.
Fred V. Williams, well known newspaperman has just been added to the permanent staff at Universal City.
The Universal studio department reports the purchase of "Christmas Eve at Pilot Butte," by Courtney Ryley Cooper, for Harry Carey.
Reginald Barker's next production for Goldwyn will be "The Old Nest," from Rupert Hughes' novel of the same name.
Rollin Sturgeon starts "The Bobbed Squad," starring Gladys Walton within the next few days. Playing an important role in this story will be Florence Turner.
Katherine Newlin Burt, the novelist, has arrived at Culver City studios where she will study picture technique and work out her first story written directly for the screen.
King Baggot has been engaged to head an all-star cast for the John Gorman Prod., in "The Soul of Butterfly," a comedy drama now being filmed under direction of John Gorman at the Special studios. Margaret Daw and Fritzi Brunette are also members of the cast.
An innovation being tried out at Universal City to eliminate delays in production is the putting of an advance agent with every company. The advance agent will stay just one day ahead of the director, seeing that sets are ready, costumes are finished, props on hand and everything in ship-shape order so that the director can start "shooting" the moment the company is assembled.
Universal City is being photographed from every conceivable angle and elevation for a series of pictures which are to accompany an article describing to the big studio in a forthcoming issue of the M. P. Weekly. The magazine is edited by Paul Gallico. Universal publicity chief of the company is overseeing the process of making a motion picture from the author's idea to the exhibitor counting the money after the show.

Leod Closes Louisville Deal
(Special to WID'S DAILY)
Louisville—Col. Fred Levy, holder of the Associated First National Franchise for Kentucky, and Leo Keller of Paducah, who control a chain of 19 theaters in Kentucky through the Strand Amusement Co., have completed negotiations for an affiliation with M. Switow in the ownership of three theaters here. Included in the deal is the new $200,000 theater erected by Switow on 4th St., directly across the street from the new Rialto. The Parkland and another neighborhood house are the others.
The other theaters owned by Switow—two in Jeffersonville, three in New Albany, one in Bedford, Ind., and one in Salem, Ind., are not included in the deal.

Take March, for Instance—

W.EVE told you that we’ve got an unapproachable list of big pictures for the next six months. Not pictures that we plan to make, but productions already in work or finished.

The first of these six months is March. Take time to go over this list, keeping in mind, as you read, your own box-office, and see if you don’t honestly agree that every one of the pictures is a really big one—big in every sense of the word.

A Hugh Ford British Production, “THE CALL OF YOUTH”

We sent an American director to England to make this production of the play by Henry Arthur Jones, one of the three or four biggest dramatists in the world. And he hunted out the most beautiful spots and the best actors in England. The result is worth the trouble.

Thomas Meighan in “THE EASY ROAD,” with Lila Lee

You know what kind of star Meighan is—especially in heart, interest roles like “The Prince Chump.” He’s never had a weak picture yet. He’s a man that men admire and women love. Tom Forman directed this, from Hall’s splendid story.

Cosmopolitan Production, “STRAIGHT IS THE WAY”

Matt Moore and a sterling cast will win all hearts in this romance of crooks, old homes and outlaws. An original comedy drama from the studio which produced “Heliotrope” and “Humoresque.” The story is by Ethel Watts Munford Grant, adapted by Frances Marion, and directed by Robert G. Vignola.

William S. Hart in “O’MALLEY OF THE MOUNTED”

Wm. S. Hart Production

Laid in the great Northwest, and photographed in the original settings, this story of a member of the Mounted who disguised as a bandit to get his man is as full of thrills and heart interest as “The Testing Block.” Lambert Hitch adapted and directed from Hart’s own story, and Joe August, A.S.C., photographed.

Robert Z. Leonard’s Production, “THE GILDED LILY”

With Mae Murray

You’ll never forget Miss Murray as the cabaret dancer in “On With the Dance.” She has the same sort of role, in a picture as expensively and brilliantly produced as anything ever made. The costumes and sets will take your breath away, and the strong drama of it will make you gasp. Clara S. Beranger wrote the story.

Dorothy Dalton in “THE TEASER”

In “The Flame of the Yukon” Miss Dalton made her greatest hit. This is her greatest picture since then. Laid in a little mining town, and full of life and passion, “The Teaser” will be a memorable picture for your box-office.

Thomas H. Ince’s Special, “BEAU REVEL,” with Florence Vidor

Louis Joseph Vance’s best selling novel produced on a big scale with a cast including Lewis Stone and Lloyd Hughes. One of Ince’s most elaborate productions, based on a gripping and unusual plot—the love of father and son for the same woman.

"I am amazed," said he, 'at the lack of vision that certain of our best known novelists have of the screen's future. Take, for instance, Barrie. There is no production film than 'The Little Minister.' It has such wonderful possibilities for the making of a really great picture that I must confess I am surprised that Sir James Barrie has not taken the very greatest care and advice to see that his play should stand out as an epic of the screen.

"If authors would only consent to put their plays in the hands of the most capable producers and take for their remuneration a percentage of the boxoffice fees they would not only be assured of their works living on the screen, but would reap a far more handsome reward than they do at present. To me it is amazing that an author should sell perhaps his greatest work for a few thousand dollars, when, by co-operation with the producer, he could reap a far greater reward. Barrie would receive anything from at least $500,000 for film rights of 'The Little Minister.'

"Watching Mr. Griffith as he was speaking, I could not help sensing his desire to film this masterpiece.

And later the following appears:

"I took Mr. Griffith back to the days when he used to produce for the old Biograph Company. 'Yes,' he remarked, with a smile, 'if you will remember 'Over the Hill,' which is being shown at a theater close by, was done by me nearly 10 years ago.'

Near the close Fredman states: "It will be interesting to readers of the Film Renter and Moving Picture News to know that Mr. Griffith expects to arrive in this country very early in the new year, for the taking of several scenes in a forthcoming production."

The Griffith offices stated yesterday that it was true the producer planned to go to England in March to take some scenes for the Thomas Burke story he is now working on. No definite plans have been made, however, and it is very likely that those scenes will be made here instead of abroad. Griffith originally placed the gross exhibition value of "Way Down East" at $3,000,000, but because of the manner in which the various road shows were going, the $4,000,000 valuation mentioned above is expected to be reached.

Nebraska To Act
(Special to WID’S DAILY)
Lincoln, Neb.—The fight against state censorship is on in Nebraska. A child welfare commission has introduced a bill which provides for a board of three censors, with an office force of about nine people. The censors are to receive $1,000 a year salary, and money will be allowed to pay the cost of maintaining the censorship office. The advocates of the bill are maintaining that it will bring in no additional cost upon the state, as the fees from the picture companies will be sufficient to pay all expenses. The bill also provides Sunday closing.

A committee is here representing the exhibitors in their fight. Throughout the state exhibitors are circulating petitions which declare that the public is in favor of the defeat of the censorship bill. In every theater a small table is maintained near the entrance, and all patrons are invited to sign the petitions which are kept on the table.

MOTION PICTURE DAY, WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 26th

The Motion Picture Industry will save 250,000 Children from Starvation

Daily Doings of Hoover's Doers

Henderson's Poem

Daniel Henderson, a magazine poet, has especially for the European Relief Council and dedicated to Herbert Hoover, chairman, a set of verses appropriate to the efforts to win aid for the starving children across the Atlantic. It is suggested that New York theater managers have these verses recited by a speaker at each performance on Motion Picture Day in their houses.

HOW PETE LOST HIS PURSE

By Daniel Henderson

"Come, I've money to burn tonight--Show me the way to the Street of Eight!

"Show me the way to a swell cafe, And the liveliest stage along Broadway!

"Who's the girl that's passing the hat? Say, I wonder how much!

"Hang-over war drives me sore! What—it's the kiddies she's pleadin' for!

"Millions of 'em without a crust, And if we fail—die they must!

"Lord, it sort of strikes me dumb To hear of toots without a crumb!

"Pardon me, Miss, for talkin' wild—Take this wallet—an' save a child!"

Tell your audiences in every way. Speakers, humanitarian workers and motion picture stars will help you. This is the day for the sale of the special Saturday matinee tickets at 50 cents—and up, if your warm-hearted patrons will pay more. A treasurer will be in charge of each of corps of workers assigned by Mrs. Paul Forster, 202 Capitol Theater Bldg., Circle 4412. Film stars will be assigned by the Star Appearance Committee. The Girl is Game

Mary Schaefer, who is on a sympathy fast in behalf of the starving children abroad, had lost six pounds Thursday on the fifty day of her fast. Miss Hildusten, Red Cross dietician, found her in apparently fine condition, due to the health and weight with which Miss Schaefer had entered upon her experiment. Mary has been subsisting upon about 200 calories per day, instead of the 2300 calories per day which a girl of her age, 16, and height, 5 ft. 4 in. should have.

Raising funds for starving children is something really worth while.

The Dire Results

The high cost of production became apparent when M. S. Epstein of the Joseph M. Schenck organization, who re- turned from his post in Los Angeles yesterday as business manager for the first John Em- erson-Anita Loos production, "Wife Insurance," stated that empty liquor bottles had been rented as residents at $30 cents a day apiece. The expense was $30 a day for 100 bottles used. "It seemed an outrageous expense, and we tried to find our own bottles at first," said Epstein. "It was impossible to come up with more than a dozen bot- tles which bore well known stamps such as 'Gordon Gin' or 'Dewar Scotch.' Cham- pagne bottles were not to be found at all. But one canny Los Angeles gentleman had cornered the market and sold empty bottles and made a busi- ness of renting them to movie companies—and in the end we had to deal with him as the other companies had."
Sensational as a book, this big, stirring drama of a love that was almost lost becomes even more gripping and powerful on the screen...

A CORRECTION

In the chart preceding the review of “Man—Woman—Marriage” appearing in last Sunday’s issue, the usual criticism with reference to “direction” was inadvertently and unintentionally omitted. Allen Holubar’s direction of this unusual story and theme was exceedingly capable—perhaps the very best work and most sincere that he has ever done.

Beautiful Star in Exceptionally Dramatic Story With Real Wallop

Betty Compson in "PRISONERS OF LOVE"
Betty Compson Prod.—Goldwyn
DIRECTOR ......................... Arthur Rosson
AUTHOR ........................ Catherine Henry CAMERAMAN ...................... Ernest Palmer
AS A WHOLE. Exceptionally dramatic sex problem story with powerful acting situations very well done

STORY... Holds interest throughout, moves rapidly with several very good wallops DIRECTION... Gives distinctive atmosphere and handles big situations with effective repression

STORY... Decidedly pleasing and artistic LIGHTINGS......... Many unusually effective bits CAMERAWORK .......... Uniformly excellent STAR......... Gives very forceful portrayal and is exceptionally beautiful

SUPPORT...... Very well chosen. Helped materially in keeping situations balanced

EXTERIORS......... Very few but those good INTERIORS........ Quite satisfactory. One or two big elaborate sets

DETAIL........ Pleasing because action flows smoothly without bad spots

CHARACTER OF STORY.... Presents powerful sex problem but has been so well handled cannot be objected to

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ............ 5,800 feet

Naturally much was expected of Betty Compson after her exceptional portrayal of Rose in George Loane Tucker's masterpiece, "The Miracle Man." Miss Compson's first production independently made by her and distributed through Goldwyn will not only satisfy her admirers, but will bring her new friends, because she has demonstrated her ability as an emotional actress, and in this production where she was the central figure throughout, and was not playing an underworld character, her unusual beauty is particularly effective.

Miss Compson has given in this, her first production, a story which has several new angles on the eternal triangle, and she has wisely surrounded herself with an exceptionally powerful cast which has been given opportunities that keep the situations properly balanced throughout.

Starting off with an elaborate setting which marks class in the first few feet, photographic and artistic values of the production are held up all the way. There is also that rather rare condition of a story which opens with a smashing situation and continues to build through one fine acting climax to another without going to pieces at any time.

Miss Compson earns her right to be considered a real star, which position she gave indication of having a right to through her dramatic portrayal in "The Miracle Man." Most of our stars who are now doing big emotional parts have passed beyond the age when they can easily step into a part demanding youth. Most of our youthful stars are unable to effectively handle big emotional situations. That gives Miss Compson an exceptional opportunity, and she has certainly made good in this, her first production.

Ralph Lewis, Roy Stewart and Emory Johnson know how to make a real situation ring true. Their work with Miss Compson in this helps very decidedly in keeping the proper balance throughout. Others in the very satisfactory cast are Clara Horton, and Clara McDowell.

If You Can't Get 'Em In On This You Should Lock Up

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

From a box office viewpoint if you know anything about handling a good advertising possibility this should surely be a clean-up. There has been no production in years to make one-half the friends that George Loane Tucker's production of "The Miracle Man" made. That film undoubtedly caused more discussion and is remembered by more people than any film ever made. Everyone will remember the girl. It is up to you to intelligently present the fact that this is her first big independent production in which she is presented as a star, and you can safely promise that this is an exceptionally powerful story that will win new friends for Miss Compson.

The story is rather sexy in spots but has been so splendidly handled that you will have no difficulty on that score.

Do not run too wild in your sex catch-lines, because that will not be necessary in this case where you have a corking good title and a beautiful star with her first production, following a tremendous success that was seen by most every theatergoer in the country. You might also in your advertising elaborate upon the fact that because of Mr. Tucker's illness, following the completion of "The Miracle Man," Miss Compson was able to secure his entire staff who worked with her in the making of this film.

CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Parisian connoisseur obsessed with desire to overcome truth with evil

No one is going to be sorry they saw "The Devil," for they will be well pleased with the work of George Arliss, who is seen in the role which he created on the stage. His performance is entertainment in itself and there's little doubt but that those who made the picture were well aware of the fact that the story possibilities were such that it alone would mean little. So they have managed to keep Arliss on the screen continuously. He appears in practically every scene, and his splendid work always registers.

The story of "The Devil," is uninteresting and monotonous of itself, consisting as it does, in merely repetition. The Parisian connoisseur who has a fiendish desire to show his "friends" that evil can overcome truth and at the same time satisfy his passion for arranging love affairs and then breaking them up—that is all there is to the story.

Director Young has managed the production very well and the players are all splendidly handled. The settings are all very fine and the photography and camera work generally help to satisfy the technical end of it.

The story doesn't count enough to waste criticism on, but there is one scene which tends to spoil the atmosphere which, despite the title which probably doesn't intimate anything very delicate, is nevertheless unspoiled by anything unpleasant. In the end, when the fiend finds all his other plans to spoil two people's happiness fail, he plays his last card and attacks the woman. Arliss is shown tearing the clothes off the girl. Even for emphasis this needn't be.

Dr. Muller describes himself as the "friend" of the people whose happiness he delights in ruining. His victims are Mimi, a model, Paul an artist, Marie and her lover Georges. Sylvia Breamer, Edmund Lowe, Lucy Cotton and Roland Bottomerly play the last four mentioned, respectively. Marie and Georges are engaged but Muller manages to interest Marie in Paul and she believes she loves him and when she has given up Georges, she discovers that Paul is evidently in love with Mimi but Paul isn't in love with Mimi, although Mimi loves him.

And so it goes on—this love business—with the participants happy until Muller gets his finger in the pie again, and then everything goes wrong. Eventually Marie marries her first love, Georges, and Muller tries to break up their home but it fails. Paul is happy with Mimi, and Marie happy with Georges. Muller's last hope—attacking Marie—fails. His misery causes his face to resemble "The Devil" and shooting flames cover up his countenance, and a vision of the cross forms an invisible barrier which prevents his further attempt to go after his victim.

Make Good Use of the Splendid Exploitation Angles It Affords.

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

There's little doubt about it that the story part of this isn't going to matter much since it is essentially the performance of George Arliss that people will go to see. And your cue is to boost it from this standpoint. You can go the limit on your promises regarding the actor's performance. Tell them he is seen in the role which he created on the stage. He is well known for his unusual characterizations and his name should be sufficient to interest them.

The exploitation end of it should be simple. You have a good title to work with and one which suggests many and varied ways of advertising your showing of the picture. A good lobby display will attract attention. Besides the star, if you want other names, you have other well known names to work with in those of the supporting company.

Allan Dwan has undoubtedly made a master-piece, and the drawing power of same is unquestioned, and we feel that you are justly entitled to the above information.

DETAIL .................. Carefully considered

CHARACTER OF STORY......Romance of New England village, in which the villain is foiled by the winning of a horse race

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION......About 5,000 feet

Maurice Tourneur has taken hold of Neil Burgess “The Country Fair,” one of the very popular plays of the last generation, and transferred it to the screen with the same spirit in which it must originally have been written, with a keen insight into the manners, customs, and peculiarities of New England village life. Possibly some people will smile at the old stagey theme of the villain foreclosing the mortgage, and the final foiling of his dirty work by the hero plus the race horse, but even these will find the picture interesting and exciting.

Tourneur has made the first part entertaining, even though the action is slow, and then gathered momentum as the story goes on, up to a fine climax in the horse race. The love story of Sally and Joel has been pleasingly told, with Helen Jerome Eddy and David Butler giving good performances.

Aunt Abigail, and her adopted daughter, Sally, are threatened with the loss of their home through the foreclosure of a mortgage held by Solon Hammerhead. The only outlets are for either Aunt Abigail to marry the old villain, or for Sally to marry his mean, scheming son, Bruce. To prevent Aunt Abigail losing her home, Sally is about to consent to marry Bruse, in spite of the fact that she is really in love with Joel, the hired man. She has only a few days in which to decide before the mortgage falls due. That night Tim Vail, a former jockey, breaks into the house for food, and when he tells his story, kind hearted Aunt Abigail gives him a job on the farm. Tim discovers that Aunt Abigail’s horse, “Cold Molasses” is a born racer, and he and Joel get permission to train the horse for the big three thousand dollar race at the County Fair, which takes place on the day the mortgage falls due.

The Hammerheads, discovering that Cold Molasses is likely to beat their own entry, attempt to keep her out of the race by setting fire to the barn, but the horse is rescued by Tim.

The big race starts off with Cold Molasses in the lead. At the last moment Hammerhead’s horse passes her, and it looks as though the old home is gone until Hammerhead’s horse is disqualified for foul play.

The winnings pay off the mortgage, Joel and Sally are happy, and Aunt Abigail finally gets her bashful suitor.

A Famous Play and Chances for Big Bally-Hoo

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The picture is taken from such a well known stage play, and such a popular one for many years, that the title itself will be a great drawing card. Use it extensively and, of course, feature it above everything else. In connection with the title use Neil Burgess’ name, as he is linked firmly with the play as the creator of “Aunt Abigail.”

Tell them it is a Tourneur production, as his name also has a decided drawing power. Talk about the fine atmosphere and detail of the production, and promise a thrilling horse race. The names of David Butler, Wesley Barry, and Helen Jerome Eddy, can all be used to advantage.

The picture offers lots of opportunity for circus stunts, “Fair” lobbies and street advertising such as. Rube bands, hay-rack rides, etc.

DETAIL ......................... Fair
CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Capricious young wife who ruins husband she loves in at attempt to make him Prime Minister

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... About 6,000 feet

The most that can be said for "The Marriage of William Ashe," is that it's unfortunate that it doesn't come up to the average feature offering. And perhaps it is not the fault of those who made the picture or those who played the parts and yet Margaret Mayo's dramatization of Mrs. Humphrey Ward's novel might have been made at least more interesting by a little more judicious handling.

The direction is one reason for some of the picture's fault. The director probably realized that something was needed to offset the rather dull main theme and so he has introduced two characters who appear after the fashion of the characters Mrs. and Mr. Jiggs in the "Bringing Up Father" cartoon. He attempts to inject some comedy by their actions, Mrs. what-ever-her-name-is, losing her wig and a few other small bits that don't get over.

Somebody's to blame for such things as this: A title reads "And when the proofs were ready" following which is a street scene showing tow of the characters in a coach and they aren't the characters that have to do with the "proofs." .

Kitty Bristol thinking to help her husband's cure the position of Prime Minister hands over some cartoons which she has drawn, to Geoffrey Cliffe, her husband's political enemy, with the understanding that they are to be published in book form and that its circulation will be a benefit to her husband. The cartoons consist of sketches of some of her husband's associates whom Kitty dislikes enough to draw caricatures of.

To further shock some of these associates who have already shown their dislike for Kitty, the latter, at a charity fete which she gives, appears as Lady Godiva, riding a white horse and nude with the exception of a long-haired wig. Kitty is banished but later her husband seeks her and they are happy until the book is published and he is politically ruined. There follows a scene in which the husband attacks Cliffe, but learns his wife is still true to him and they are happy together when he trails her to the convent whither she has gone.

Make No Promises If You Show It.

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

If they cut about fifteen hundred feet out of this and straighten out some errors either in titling or cutting, perhaps "The Marriage of William Ashe" will run more smoothly, be less tedious than it is at present. The actual material taken from Mrs. Humphrey Ward's novel couldn't have been particularly well suited to the screen in the first place so perhaps those who had the making of the picture on their hands have done the best they could with it.

You can use the star's name and probably if she is well liked you can get away with it. She appears practically in every scene, so those who like her will have a feast of her in this. May gets a bit daring in her appearance as Lady Godiva. Stills of this will be sure to attract a certain element. If you happen to cater to this class you can lure them with this but be sure the censor board isn't around. Catchlines could be worked around the idea of the young wife who ruined her husband in an attempt to make him Prime Minister. But under any circumstances, don't boast.

EXTERIORS … One or two have “setty” appearance

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ....... 5,800 feet

“Women Men Love,” released by the Bradley Feature Film Corp. on the state rights market is not an unusual production but it will make a first rate state rights offering because it boasts of some well known players and even though the story is made up of situations based on the eternal triangle question, the interest throughout has been well maintained and the director has managed to keep the spectator’s attention evenly attracted to the end.

William Desmond as the husband, Marguerite Marsh as the wife, and Martha Mansfield as the sister, have equally prominent roles and all do very well. Even Burrows Fontaine, the dancer, has the role of the vamp and also does a dance that even the sure-footed, home-loving husband falls for.

The director has also managed to keep the ending in doubt until the end. Usually in this type of story, you can guess just what’s going to happen long before, but at the end she sees the folly of it and there is a reconciliation. Another thing the director is to be thanked for is that he didn’t drag in another love affair for the sister.

The titles introducing the characters should be rewritten; they are too “gushy” and poetical to be real. Otherwise the detail is well taken care of. The exterior locations are good and most of the interiors though one or two look too much like studio sets.

David Hunter, his wife Evelyn, their little daughter Dora and Evelyn’s sister Ruth live together. Evelyn is a butterfly type, while her husband is a home-loving man and a successful architect. David realizes that his wife is seen too often in the company of Stephan Dabney, an idler. Ruth is also aware of Evelyn’s infatuation and warns her to beware.

Evelyn loses heavily at bridge and as a last resort accepts the aid of Dabney. David finds her in Dabney’s embrace. The husband is willing to forgive and forget but goaded on to a divorce by Moira Lamson, a vamp, Evelyn refuses a reconciliation. David refuses to grant a divorce so Moira offers her services—she will vamp him. She does and promises to marry David if he will divorce Evelyn. David succumbs to the vamp’s plan but Ruth, who had meantime left her sister’s household because Evelyn accused her of loving David, and wanting him for herself, returns and foils Moira’s plan.

Evelyn is taken ill and the doctor insists that she lead a simple life if she wants to live at all. But Dabney could not lead such a life and he deserts her. David and Ruth go to Evelyn and there follows a reconciliation.

Fine List Of Names To Work With If You Play It.

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Unless you are opposed to stories dealing with divorce and domestic troubles generally, you can book “Women Men Love” and probably satisfy the majority. You have three or four very well known players’ names to work with and they should be used to good advantage. The title isn’t particularly pertinent but has a drawing power and could be used attractively with catchlines such as: “What kind of women do men love?” See William Desmond in his latest feature production “Women Men Love” for the answer.

The picture is really suited to adult audiences preferably, although there is nothing really objectionable except one shot showing the husband in a disreputable house where the “framed” evidence is to be secured. This should be cut and merely suggested by a title.
“Miss Compson has retained every vibrant element of her charm and her presence is as enriching as the gleam of an opal—as glowing, as iridescent.”

“Betty Compson’s acting is a revelation. With shades of expression veritably mirroring each change of emotion, she makes of the role of Blanche Davis a vibrant living part.”

Los Angeles Herald

“I will say here and now that Betty Compson’s interpretive work in ‘Prisoners of Love’ is better than in ‘The Miracle Man.’”

Los Angeles Express
a Tremendous Success At Two of Her First Starring Vehicle

The New York Times says:

"'Prisoners of Love' is genuinely dramatic and its people are such as one meets in social life. It is full of 'plot,' it even has 'punch.' Miss Compson has made good the promise of 'The Miracle Man.'"

"'Prisoners of Love' is a strongly dramatic story which gives Miss Compson an opportunity to do even more striking work than she did in 'The Miracle Man.'"

"The picture provides Miss Compson with copious opportunities for displaying her rights to stardom. Miss Compson plays her role exceedingly well with a perfect mastery of the lights and shadows."

"Miss Compson's acting is so good that your sympathies are enlisted—she is exquisite in all her phases and an ornament to any production."

As a whole... Rather confusing in its attempt to mystify. Well acted, but the story sets forth an unnecessary amount of criminal elements.

STORY...... An Arsene Lupin story adapted from Maurice Leblanc's novel

Music, lighting and direction are the outstanding elements of the production. The suspense is there, but the attempt to visualize the multiple schemes and disguises of resourceful Lupin becomes confusing in the rapid sequence of events which has a tendency to kill some of the interest. There is a morbid element, too, to the tale which becomes unnecessarily vivid in picture form. The wholesale murders and the bloodthirsty character of the woman as exposed in the denouement will not please a lot of people, and the idea of a man committing suicide by hanging himself could have been suggested rather than shown without detracting from the situation.

The Name of Arsene Lupin, and A Promise of Mystery, Your Best Bets

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Maurice Leblanc has made the name of Arsene Lupin well known among all readers of fiction, and the celebrated hero-thief offers probably your biggest possibility in advertising. You can promise a very good portrayal of the character by Wedgwood Nowell, and you can also say that the picture is taken from one of the most exciting of the Arsene Lupin stories.

Talk about the great mystery of the story with the surprise in the climax. The title offers innumerable possibilities for creating interest with teaser ads and contests. The significance of the numbers can be used in many ways other than their bearing on the story. If you want a catch line, this will do: "Added, subtracted, divided, the mysterious numbers gave the answer 813. What did it mean?"

CHARACTER OF STORY......Crook is reformed by influence of little cripple girl

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... 5,693 feet

Thomas Meighan who is probably best known for his portrayal of the crook in George Loane Tucker's "The Miracle Man," has another crook role in "The Frontier of the Stars," but it's a weak one. The picture is nearly six reels but it isn't until practically the very last reel that the star is called upon to do any acting of any account. There's just one scrap in the opening scenes in which the star is caught with a gun in his hand after a fight but escapes from the police.

The roof scene doesn't look like the real thing but the backgrounds are usually kept so dark that it won't matter. The director has worked the climax up well, providing a spectacular bit in a fire which traps the crook and the girl in the house and their escape later.

Hilda Shea, the cripple girl, had never been anywhere but up on the roof, except at night when she was taken down stairs to sleep. She lived with her brother Phil Hoyt, and his wife Mary. Hoyt was a detective and was doing his best to round up Buck Leslie (Meighan), and his gang of crooks. He almost had the "goods" on Buck when he escaped and hid on the roof of the tenement where he met Hilda.

The girl helped Buck to hide and thereafter they were pals and through the good influence and the innocence of the little girl, who had never been anywhere, Buck began to reform. He even secured honest employment in the mill. Buck's reformation disgusted his pals and so they framed a trick on him. Telling him it was an invention formula they got Buck to mix up some explosive acids, thinking he would be killed doing it. But he wasn't. And the acids were for the purpose of blowing open safe noislessly.

While showing his "invention" to Hilda, Hoyt appeared on the scene and a test proved that Buck was planning another "job" although he swore he had been framed. A fight followed and Buck escaped and in the excitement Hilda walked for the first time. Later the building caught fire and Buck risked his life to save Hilda. Explanations followed and the two were happy.

If you think Thomas Meighan's appearance will be sufficient to satisfy them you may get by with "The Frontier of the Stars," although it is not a very strong crook story. The part of "Buck Leslie," doesn't provide Meighan with enough to do. He has a couple of good scraps but the rest of the time he spends chatting with the little cripple girl on the roof of the tenament. This is a bit tame for a crook.

The climax is a good one so it may be that they will forget the slow business in the early reels and go out satisfied with the finish. If you can rely on this to satisfy them, you can book "The Frontier of the Stars" safely enough. Tell them it's an Albert Payson Terhune story and that it ran as a serial in the All Star Weekly magazine. You might use Faire Binney's name if you think well of it. Catchlines would attract and other exploitation ideas can be gotten from the press sheet provided by Paramount.

acted, but with no outstanding features of merit

STORY.....Clearly told, but highly improbable in subject

DIRECTION.....Has handled thrills well in fight scenes and kept interest as high as possible

PHOTOGRAPHY ..................... Good
LIGHTINGS ........................ All right

lead. Walter Long gives good performance as villain in dual role

INTERIORS ........................ Correct

DETAIL ........................ Adequate

CHARACTER OF STORY..... Wealthy aristocrat falls in love with girl of the lower East Side

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ........ 4,689 feet

Universal offers an average piece of entertainment of the thrill and adventure type in "Tiger True," with the main objection being the highly improbable nature of the theme. It keeps the interest through a great part of its length by means of some corking fist fights which Mayo puts on with fast and furious realism. When there isn't a fight going on there is every prospect of another in a minute, so that the audience that enjoys a good fight will be kept in anticipation by this one until their wish is gratified.

The theme is improbable. The idea of a wealthy Fifth Avenue "blue blood" falling in love with a girl from the lowest part of the city, a girl who is the friend and confidante of all the city's worst criminals will be considered too fantastical to be enjoyable by a lot of picture patrons. It is hardly to be supposed, either, that there is in the present day a cafe like the one pictured, in New York, and run by a girl.

Jack Lodge about to leave for his favorite haunt, the jungles of Africa, sees a girl in that part of the underworld known as "The Tangle," who appeals to him by a display of fiery courage in defying a gang of rough necks. He determines to meet her.

Identifying her as the owner of the "Midway," the cafe hangout of the underworld, Jack enters the place and endeavors to make friends. Mary Dover is suspicious of his soft, manicured hands, and orders him "bounced." The result is that Jack beats up the bouncer, and clears out the cafe and is hired by Mary as the new bouncer. She christens him "The Tiger."

Word comes that "The Baboon," a criminal of marvelous powers, is in his old haunts and has ordered the "Tiger" to leave the Tangle. Jack meets the Baboon who tells him that he must leave and that Mary doesn't want him. Jack determines to stay and learn the truth when he sees Mary with her arms around the Baboon's neck.

Meantime the Tiger has arranged through Old Whitey, the dumb paralytic who guides the district's fortunes from his cot, to meet the Baboon. Whitey himself is the Baboon and he ambushes the Tiger in a dark alley. Then the fight. The Baboon is beaten and departs, after confessing that he is Mary's step-brother. A year of marriage and life abroad effaces the Tangle from Mary's life.

Use The Star's Name And Promise Some Real Fist Fights.

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

There are several points of appeal for use in adversising "Tiger True," but probably the two best are the name of Frank Mayo, whose name you can link with "The Brute Breaker," "Lasca," and "Hitchin' Posts," in which pictures he scored successes. Tell them that it is a story of a virile, red blooded man, and make clear how well suited the star is to the part.

Then talk about the fist fights and the attendant thrills. There are two big fights in which Mayo cleans up an entire gang and afterward beats the toughest of them all. Let them know that this is a real fight, and that Mayo's opponent is Al Kaufman, one-time contender for the championship. Count on the promise of thrills to get them in, rather than on the story. Use the line: "It's a long jump from Fifth Avenue to the Bowery, but Jack Lodge made it—and brought back a wife."

                            trouble but also wins her a husband
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .......... About 5,000 feet

Wanda Hawley hasn't anything exceptional in the way of a story in her latest production for Reallart, but it does provide her with a really attractive part and she makes the most of it. There are some amusing situations, cases of mistaken identity, a "girlish impulse" to take the place of a famous snake dancer, a kidnapping sequence and whatnot that aren't altogether original ideas but they serve to provide a good romantic twist to "Her First Elopement."

The director has done well with the story, especially with regard to securing an attractive atmosphere and good backgrounds for his action. The exterior shots consist of many pretty locations—muchly California; there are some scenes aboard a good looking yacht and the detail, generally, is quite correct. But there are times when interest sags and you expect things to reach the "finis" point but something happens that leads to further complications and on they go for another stretch. This isn't any serious fault, however, and as a whole, the production should satisfy.

Wanda Hawley is pleasing as the girl with the "impulse" and she has been splendid photographed. Jerome Patrick is the good looking hero, while others who handle their respective parts very well are Nell Graig, Jay Eaton, Helen Dunbar and Edwin Stevens.

Christina Elliott and her cousin, Gerald Elliott, live with their aunt and uncle, Mr. and Mrs. Varden, who have threatened to cut off Gerald's inheritance if he marries Lotta St. Regis, a snake dancer. Christina goes to Lotta's cottage to see for herself just what she is like. Adrian Maitland is also on his way to Lotta's cottage in an effort to persuade her to leave his younger brother alone. On the porch of Lotta's cottage Adrian meets Christina (Lotta is not at home) and takes her for the dancer.

For the joke of it Christina allows him to think she is Lotta and he later gets her aboard his yacht where after making her a prisoner, Christina tells him who she really is. She has been compromised but Adrian has really fallen in love with her and they land and are married, though no one knows it until some time later when Lotta, trying to secure Gerald with his money—rather than without—tells Mr. and Mrs. Varden that their ward spent a night aboard the Maitland yacht.

Explanations follow, Christina and Adrian go off on a second honeymoon and Gerald refuses to have anything to do with Lotta, who shrugs her shoulders and says "there are a lot more fish in the sea."

Star's Admirers Will Like Her In This.
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

If you are looking for a light bit of entertainment you can safely book "Her First Elopement" and feel assured that you will be showing such a picture. There's nothing unusual about the story, or production either for that matter, but the whole thing averages up as a satisfactory offering, with a pleasing star, an attractive lot of scenes to look at and some amusing situations that develop into a pretty romance.

The title is a good one and could be played up with catchlines such as "'Her First Elopement' wasn't planned, but see how it turned out a success in Wanda Hawley's latest Reallart production." Or, "If ever you're looking for an adventure just make believe you're somebody other than yourself and see how many things can happen. One girl got a husband that way. 'Her First Elopement' is at the blank theater."

"THE LITTLE 'FRAID LADY"
Robertson-Cole

DIRECTOR .......... John Adolphi
AUTHOR ............ Marjorie Benton Cooke
SCENARIO BY ...... Jos. W. Parnham
CAMERAMAN .......... George Benoit
AS A WHOLE ...... Real heart interest in this; a delighted star that would make you like any story STORY ........ Quite pleasing since the heart interest is kept uppermost with the other business kept secondary DIRECTION ........... Very good
PHOTOGRAPHY ......... Good
LIGHTINGS .......... Some soft focus attempts not successful CAMERA WORK .......... All right
STAR .......... Delightful
SUPPORT ........... All well suited and capable EXTERIORS .......... Several very pretty shots
INTERIORS .......... Look like the real thing
DETAIL .......... Adequate
CHARACTER OF STORY .... Young girl trying to get away from unfortunate parental surroundings earns the name "Little 'Fraid Lady"
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... 5,600 feet

In one of the sub-titles of the picture, one of the characters in speaking of the star in her part as the young girl who seems to be afraid, says "there's a remarkable personality and fascination about that girl." And it's just this fact together with good direction that puts over "The Little 'Fraid Lady." Mae Marsh's personality stands out above everything else and her manner of registering various emotions is bound to appeal.

The story which has been taken from a novel by Marjorie Benton Cooke, isn't unusual of itself but a good scenario has been written for it and the director has managed to keep the more pleasing phases of it uppermost and while there is a murder case and the customary court scene that has to be used, still it is so well managed and there is so little of it that it's not going to spoil the really good heart interest that comes through the situation of the little girl who lives alone, except for her pet dog, trying to hide from a crook father who would use her as a tool in his "business." A rather effective suspense is created by withholding the cause of her self-banishment and then again when a man appears who tries to use her to shield himself, the audience does not know until the end that he is her father.

Tully Marshall, as the father, gives his usual splendid performance. Kathleen Kirkham, Charles Meredith, Herbert Prior, Gretchen Hartman, and George Bertholome, Jr., make up the remainder of the supporting company, not forgetting Jacques 111, a clever dog that has quite a big part of his own.

Cecilia Carne (Mae Marsh), has taken possession of a small lodge on the estate of Judge Carteret. Among Cecilia's neighbors is Mrs. Helen Barrett, a widow, whose little boy, Bobby, has named Cecilia 'Little 'Fraid Lady,' because she will not make friends. Even Cecilia's dog has his mistress's feeling of enmity and when he encounters Bobby near an enhancement, the dog starts to chase the little boy. The child stumbles and is hurt.

Through this incident, Cecilia meets Saxton Graves, Mrs. Barrett's brother, who learns that Cecilia is an artist. Cecilia is very happy when she is hired to do some decorating in the home of Judge Carteret, for which she receives a check for $1,000. She overhears a conversation from which she learns that the Judge is trying a case in which Giron is implicated.

It turns out that Giron is her father, a crook, from whom Cecilia has been hiding. Complications follow in which Cecilia, Giron and the Judge play the principal parts. Eventually Giron shoots himself and Cecilia is happy with Graves.

Promise Them They'll "Love" the Star in This

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You should be able to satisfy them with this, Mae Marsh is an old favorite and although she has been absent from the screen for some time, her old admirers will be glad to see her back and they will be pleased with her work. Her same delightful personality predominates in "The Little 'Fraid Lady," and she is given every opportunity to make use of her own inimitable mannerisms which win for her so much admiration.

You can say the story is from Marjorie Benton Cooke's novel "The Girl who Lived in the Woods." You can use the director's name and refer to his work in the Carpenter picture "The Wonder Man." Robertson-Cole have compiled a thoroughly complete and good looking press book which it would be well to secure. It contains all the ideas for exploitation that you could possibly want. You should not go wrong on this picture.

Some Short Reels

“Chicken, Country Style”—Universal

Type of production: 1 reel comedy

This one reeler features Dorothea Wolpert, whose face is her fortune, not because of her beauty, but rather because of the lack of anything else and the unoriginality and lack of any ideas on the part of the directors. Miss Wolpert does a lot of nuzzling in front of the camera which is funny for a few times and then it becomes monotonous. She has a grotesque make-up which makes love scenes in which she figures, absurd, but aside from that the stuff is time worn. In this one she is maid of all work in a farm house. Love letters to the daughter of the family are mis-delivered into her hands and she thinks several men want to marry her. When she tells them all to come to her window, the boys all think the answers are from the daughter of the house. Result: they all get caught in her room by the farmer. Then she finally lands one of them. There is enough to it to warrant calling it anything but a mediocre offering.

“Voices Of The Sea”—Bruce-Educational

Type of production: 1 reel scenic

Following the idea of its title, this reel endeavors to visualize all the various sounds of the ocean which contribute to the great roar. It is made up of a succession of shots of the sea, in deep water, on rocky coasts, on sandy beaches, and some blue tinted bits that are fine, but there is too much sameness and the reel becomes monotonous, in spite of its artiness. The average audience will tire of it when about half way through. One or two moonlight shots at the finish are especially well done. Whether the beauty of it will be appreciated and how well it will serve as a good filler to accompany any feature with a lot of scenes of interest, or not depends largely on the class of your patronage, a story of the sea.

“On The Hip”—Fox

Type of production: 1 reel animated cartoon

Mutt sees an ad offering a reward of $5000 for the return of baby Jasper, heir to millions, and sees a chance to get the dough. He shaves Jeff's whiskers off and dresses him like the kid. Old man Jazbo welcomes his lost son with open arms and is about to hand over the money to Mutt when Ma Jazbo insists on identifying Baby by the mark on his hip. Jeff has a fine time to keep from being uncovered. When they find he is shy the mark the stuff is off, and they land on their heads in the street. A good number of laughs in the reel which is more amusing than the average.

“Edgar’s Country Cousin”—Goldwyn

Type of production: 2 reel comedy

One of Booth Tarkington’s "Edgar" pictures, featuring Johnny Jones, whose interpretation of The author's boy character is as "Tarkingtonian" as any one could make it on the screen. This one is full of quiet amusement, and the "boy" humor is of the type that will be especially appreciated by high class audiences. It is thoroughly enjoyable all the way through, and except for those who demand riant slapstick in their comedies, it should please nearly everyone. Edgar from the city, goes to visit his country cousin, and at once begins to impress him and his gang with the superiority of life and ways in the city. His brave effort to go harebrained, "like we do in the city" causes him much pain, and everything in which he attempts to demonstrate the city's superiority, results disastrously. However, a black eye, a face full of bee stings, and the general bawling out of the gang fails to conquer him, and he declares that he is having a bully time. The little incident of Edgar's life is well told, and provides a high class two reel offering.

“Catching Up In Canton”—Paramount-Burton Holmes

Type of production: 1 reel travelogue

Burton Holmes, for this reel has photographed the most interesting portions of Canton, China, and has secured some views that will afford surprise as well as interest. Travel pictures of the Orient are always good bets in this line, and this one should prove very satisfactory. It is surprising to find much of the city very European in appearance. Views are shown of new skyscrapers, wins women outnumbering the men as laborers. Several views of the waterfront show a combination of the old and new civilization which makes an interesting bit. The huge wall of Canton built four hundred years ago is being torn down, and some shots of this work are shown. A bit of footage shows the old quarter of the city which has not progressed any for centuries. The reel concludes with the reel ends with Mae Murray posing in some gowns and furs from her extensive wardrobe. The titles are well done, and it is a very good number of the series.

Type of production: 1 reel fan magazine

This number "peeps into the private life" of an unusually large number of stars, and gives a lot of "off the lot" close-ups that should be interesting to still fans. The reel opens up with a shot of the old Charlie Chaplin studio, now occupied by the DeHaues, and shows Mr. & Mrs. De Haven arriving to inspect their new property. Then come some shots of the Los Angeles auto races, with close-ups of many of the stars who were present. Bryant Washburn, Betty Compson, Douglas MacLean, Lloyd Ingraham, Tom Mix and Earle Williams, all smile into the camera. H. B. Warner then gets a little excited over a race judge, and Charlie Ruggles walks all the way around to be sure he isn't left out. Others shown at the races are Wallace Reid, Herbert Rawlinson, Edwin Percy, Susan Hayakawa. Two closeups of S. L. Rothafel, of the Capitol Theater are next. Then Will Rogers twirls a mean rope and grins for the photographer. Next comes the shooting of a scene where a building is burned, then some shots of Universal City Zoo, and the reel ends with Mae Murray posing in some gowns and furs from her extensive wardrobe. The titles are well done, and it is a very good number of the series.

“The Spirit of ’21”—Universal

Type of production: 1 reel comedy

Some fairly good business develops in this reel, featuring Dorothea Wolpert. Most of it is simple stuff, but it gets across and makes about half the reel fairly amusing. There isn’t quite enough business to fill all the space, and Miss Wolpert depends too much on mugling to fill the gaps. The idea is that the servants are celebrating while their employers are at a masquerade ball, and Dorothea, as the cook, immibes too heavily. Going to bed she soon has a series of bad dreams, in which the furniture moves about, and the tiger skin on the floor takes life and chases her. As she wakes up and prepares for flight, the family comes home dressed as a skeleton and the devil. This completes her terror, until they finally take off their disguises. Some of it is fast, and there are two or three laughs. It is a fair offering.

Path Review No. 88

This reel opens with some tinted close-ups of the Flower of Good Hope showing in detail, the delicate construction of the blossom. The next shot, which is very interesting bit, shows the entire intricate process of lace manufacture by machinery. The complicated workings of the machines are clearly explained, after which the lace is seen coming from the machine in various patterns. Next, some training views of a clever monkey at the zoo, are shown. The reel concludes with views of the city of Fez, Morocco. The portion devoted to lace manufacture, makes the reel of more than average interest.
Short Reels

“His Unlucky Job”—Sunshine-Fox
Type of production.....................................2 reel comedy

There are a number of big laughs in this Sunshine number, and the greater portion of it is good stuff. Some kids in a school room contribute largely to the fun of the first part, and this is furtherabetted by trick photography and some good gags in the form of a big wind storm, which blows things around in a ridiculous manner. The second part also has a funny idea and several bits where the laughs are certain, when the citizens of the tonguest town in the West force the office of sheriff upon an unsuspecting tenderfoot. This part is speedy and full of jollies and slapstick. It gets over well. The biggest criticism of the picture is that there is entirely too much suggestive business. It is very broad in places, and while this stuff appeals to certain types in every audience, the greater number of picture patrons don’t enjoy it and don’t want it. Aside from these scenes it’s a pretty good comedy, with some sure laughs for everybody.

“Hearts And Flour”—Universal
Type of production.....................................1 reel comedy

Dorothea Wolpert is the featured comedienne in this reel, which is very shy on material. The laughs are few, and the whole idea of the comedy doesn’t register much fun. The little kid pictures worked with Miss Wolpert in other numbers, furnish some amusement in his looks and several bits of business, and the featured lady may get a couple of chuckles on her appearance. Aside from this there isn’t anything amusing in the reel. Miss Wolpert is the kitchen mechanic in a house where there is a fair daughter. On receiving word from an old friend that the friend’s son is coming to marry her daughter, the mother substitutes the maid for the daughter. Then comes some business with the maid entertaining the young man at tea. It turns out that he isn’t the friend’s son, but the gas man, and Dorothea goes back to the ice man. It is a poor number.

“Gypsy Scientists”—Goldwyn-Bray
Type of production.....................................1 reel pictorial

This Bray Pictograph takes the form of a pack train trip through the Cascade range of mountains in the state of Washington. It has been exceptionally well photographed by William and Irene Finley, and results in some beautiful shots of the mountainous regions, with its tremendous rocky crags and placid lakes. Views of the Skagit River are given, showing its deep gorges and a frail bridge spanning it at a great height. With a telephoto lens some very clear shots have been obtained of the wild animals of the region. Deer, Elk, a whole family of woodchucks, and a short shot of some wary mountain sheep, are presented. Interesting is the fact that they appear to be close-ups of the animals, offering a study which is rather unique. The reel consists of the departure of the campers for home, over a broad expanse of snow on the mountain top. It contains enough of beauty and interest to rank it as a high grade offering of the type.

“In Dutch—Educational
Type of production.....................................1 reel travelogue

This number is of the World Wandering series, and, as its title implies, takes the spectator on a short tour of Holland. The cameraman has made a very good selection of scenes, and has secured some excellent Dutch types, which makes the reel highly enjoyable from start to finish. The pleasure of the letter cards is increased by trick photography and some clever art creations accompanying them. It starts off with some views of the Dykes, the immense sea walls which keep the country in existence. Then come scenes in the quaint towns along picturesque canals, with many close-ups of in- habitants of every age. Next is shown the market place in one of the larger cities, with thousands of Edam cheese awaiting shipment. A shot shows the loading of these cheese on canal boats, by rolling them down two steps for the juggler. Other shots in the market place show two Dutch- man bargaining in a peculiar manner over the sale of some goats. A short glimpse of the Dutch militia on parade comes next, with some more close-ups of Dutch types. The reel closes with a beautiful sunset shot, in which the sun forms a background for the masts and sails of thousands of boats. It is a high class, and thoroughly enjoyable travel picture.

“Hides—And Go Seek”—Educational
Type of production.....................................1 reel Travelogue

This is one of the Hudson’s Bay Travel Series, and forms a reel of “cold” but enjoyable scenes in the daily life of a trapper in the far North. It starts off with a colored shot of a picturesque bit of northern scenery, and then the Hudson’s Bay trading station at Fort Chipewyan is shown. The trappers, headed by a French Canadian guide, leave the fort with dog teams, and are then seen travelling through some heavy snow country. On reaching the chosen camp site, the tent is pitched and preparations made for the night. Then the picture shows the various forms of traps and snares prepared for catching for bearing animals. The setting of dead-falls, beaver traps, lynx snares, and muskrat traps in the ice, forms an interesting bit of footage. After showing that it is possible to keep warm through an arctic night, by packing the beds with fir boughs, the trappers make the rounds of their traps, and the result is seen in the skins of Ermine, beaver, muskrat, skunk, and martin. Nearly all of the reel is entertaining. It’s a first rate number.

“The Instructor”—Reelcraft
Type of production.....................................1 reel comedy

This is one of a series known as Paragon Comedies, featuring George Clark. Clark has a funny make-up and presents his stuff over pretty well. This number doesn’t afford him an awful lot of opportunity, but he gets several laughs out of pure foolishness. A dwarf with a heavy weight lady skating partner also affords some amusement. Clark is very much in need of work and when he sees an ad for a roller skating instructor he applies, after a couple of narrow escapes from the park cops for flitting. He gets the job, but he can’t skate, and some fairly good business develops with Clark doing a lot of flops on the floor. Several gags are used which fail to register because of their age, but it’s fast, and gets over as an average comedy reel.

“Pussyfoot”—Reelcraft
Type of production.....................................1 reel comedy

A Paragon Comedy featuring George Clark, and containing a number of good bits. Some new comedy stunts are registered, and Clark gets them over well. It starts off with a laugh when Clark has his clothes stolen off his back while studying a book on how to be a detective. Then there is a scene in a woman’s room in his beehives, and some old time chase stuff develops which is good for a few laughs in spite of its age. Clark gets into a lot of trouble on the street, due to his scanty attire, and his general escapades from the cops make a fair amount of fun.

There is a big laugh when he slides out of his dressing gown which the cops are holding, only to walk right into it again around the corner. He finally rescues the kidnapped daughter of a millionnaire, and at the same time the kidnappers unwittingly walk into the jail. It’s a little better than average one reel offering.

“Fatherly Love”—Goldwyn
Type of production.....................................1 reel animated cartoon

The laughs aren’t as numerous in this Happy Hooligan cartoon as some preceding numbers. Happy and Glumly Gus are aiding and abetting the approaching demise of their ancient father, by chilling him when he is cold and roasting him when he is warm. The elder Hooligan kicks the bucket and then Happy and Gus, after selling his clothes, looks for the fortune. His will says that the key to the buried treasure is in one of his old shoes. Happy has sold the shoes, and to get them back he plays cat on several fences, collecting several parts of the paper with the two dig a up a trunk. When opened it contains 400 pair of shoes. There isn’t a great deal of amusement, and the reel is below the average Happy Hooligan cartoon.

"OUTSIDE THE LAW"
Is it thrilling to find a timid and beautiful girl made the companion of a desperado?
Is it exciting to find her taken into an Indian tribe as the adopted daughter of the chief?
Is it gripping to find her turned out into the world as the companion of a man she never knew before?
Is it romantic to find that he is the handsomest man in the West and to know that he loves her but won't tell?
Is it entertaining when you see the timid young girl dominating everything and everybody?
It is all of these things and in addition it is Blanche Sweet in the best role she has ever appeared in. It is a sure-fire box office picture, in star, story, and production.
Has Select Reissues
Charles Rogers to Handle Them With Special Sales Force Through Select Exchanges
Charles R. Rogers, who last week resigned as general sales manager for Selznick will handle all of the Select reissues including those of Norma Talmadge, Constance Talmadge and Clara Kimball Young, according to reports.
Rogers' arrangement will allow him to work through the existing Select exchanges all over the country. He will be in his offices later this week on a tour of the country in order to line up sales representatives who will work out of the Select offices, but will have absolutely no affiliation with the Selznick organization in any capacity except that those offices will be used as headquarters.
Rogers has been with Selznick for several years and is generally talked of as one of the best liked men in the distributing end of the game.

Convention Closes
(Special to WID'S DAILY)
St. Louis—The convention of the M. P. T. O. of Missouri closed here on Monday, May 23rd with the passing of resolutions opposing state censorship and Sunday closing. The legislative committee will resist all radical laws affecting pictures at the capital. A fund of $3,000 was raised for the national treasury.

Says Loss Was $300
(Special to WID'S DAILY)
Chicago—In connection with the story of a fire at 6227-6235 Broadway, Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of American Film Co., states:

"Late in the afternoon of Jan. 18 a small fire started in a shed in the rear of the main building of the American Film executive offices. In this shed were a lot of old postcards, negatives, and other data. The loss of the contents of this shed and the slight injury to the shed itself were small matters in comparison with the fact that the actual damage will not amount to more than about $200."

"The factory and laboratory continued without delay shipping out our quota of prints on "Sunset Jones," which happened to be in process of production, to the various American exchanges."

Reissues
Looks like they're coming. Next season, strong. Good reason. Many producers need to catch up. Financially. Opens door to good old pictures. See Charley Rogers will handle the Talmadge and other Select and Selznick material. Others getting ready. Looked as if Paramount would play also. Changed their mind at last minute. Leaving "AI" Lichtman wondering what happened. Some old Ben Turpin's showing up in Chicago. Other good pictures made long time ago also arriving.

Famous' refusal to play with reissues important. Many big film men believe they don't work out right. When there is regular supply of new stuff available. Affects sales. Possibly injures company as much with new product as it produces for old. Interesting problem.

No More Specials
From John S. Robertson and Charles Maigne—Now Directing Realart Stars
John S. Robertson and Charles Maigne are not to make any more "director specials" for Famous Players, despite the fact that the company placed these two directors in the same category with George Fitzmaurice, William and Cecil DeMille, George Melford and Hugh Ford.

This developed on Saturday when it was learned that the Long Island studio will be re-opened today with two pictures placed in production, one starring Constance Binney with Robertson directing and the other starring Alice Brady with Maigne in charge. Both will be released as part of the Realart star series.

Next Monday Justice Johnstone. starts work at the Long Island plant and George Fitzmaurice is scheduled to shoot the first scene on "Experience" on Feb. 14.

An official of the company who is in a position to speak authoritatively concerning the company's production plans was asked whether the two directors mentioned above were not to make any more "director specials." He said:

"What are 'director specials'? Besides, variety is the spice of life anyway."

Famous Players have one Robertson special, "Sentimental Tommy," ready for release and at least one, "The Kentuckians" from Maigne.

To Produce Again
Jesse J. Goldberg To Cater to State Right Market—Starts Shortly
Jesse J. Goldberg, until recently general manager of the Frohman Management Corp., plans to become a producer again.

He expects to make a series of pictures based on production costs which will allow the exhibitor to make money. The series will be sold on the state right plan and production will be in the vicinity of New York, according to Goldberg.

Goldberg is not quite ready to state what his first picture will be. He expects, however, to get it under way very shortly. Goldberg is new to the producing field although he has been more actively identified with the distributing end of the independent market. He was an active producer about eight years ago.

Remind your people that they have “kiddies” of their own, and none of us can look them straight in the eye unless we have done everything in our power to help the starving “kiddies” abroad.

HOW LONG AND HOW MUCH

Big distributor. Talking of what its cost to set up distribution system. In time. And money. Says two to three years sure before sufficient product available to make the wheels go round smoothly. And money? Says there isn't enough available to do it now. If you're able to talk a bird out of a tree you may get money these days. But not otherwise. Also put forth another angle. Interesting. Says 30 per cent. compulsory for distribution cost. And the 30 works to bigger figures the older the picture gets. Costs little at first. With first runs working. But six months later. Then it's different. "It's getting the $10 and $20 business that costs a heap." So he says. And he should know.

NOT A HESITATIONIST

Kent of Fame. Don't want to quarrel with those who hesitated about the Big 5 shown in Chicago. Says his say out. Like that. But rarely does it. And never criticises the other fellow's picture. Busy selling his own. Modern salesmanship. Something some people could well afford to follow. Too many knockers in this business.

LITTLE, BUT—OH MY!

REGARDING CHARLIE

Doesn't like publicity. Bashful. And all that sort of thin. Knows few people here. Many think him "up-stage." Why here on last trip Charlie was lonesome. Hired a cabby by the hour. Became great pals. Took cabby into a luncheonette. Coffee about midnight. Ended by cabby taking him to his own house. At door Charlie said: "Guess you better know who am. I make pictures. My name's Chaplin." "That's all right said Cabby, "come in anyway. The kid I love to see you. Charlie went. Kids did love him. He slept with three of 'em. Next morning the youngsters arose early. Scooted aroun Lined up their friends. To meet their buddy—Charlie Chaplin. Charlie loved it. Shook hands with all of 'em. Said he had best time of his trip. And he hasn't told this for publicity. Probably be sore because it's being printed.

And When April Comes Along

We've promised you six months of BIG pictures—big in star, author and director material, and big in box-office value. Not ten big pictures, nor fifteen, but TWO every WEEK. Here are the releases for April. Study them carefully and see if you aren't honestly convinced that Paramount means box-office insurance of the highest and safest kind:

George Melford's Production, "THE FAITH HEALER," by William Vaughn Moody

Though unlike "The Miracle Man" in everything except appeal, this great play by America's foremost dramatist is destined to be as great a box-office success, because it is based on the very fundamentals of human life, and marvelously produced by the director of "Rebuild My Wife." The greatest Easter Week picture ever made.

Roscio ("Fatty") Arbuckle in "THE DOLLAR A YEAR MAN"

"The Life of the Party" was unparalleled hit. It showed that the people wanted five reels of Arbuckle's funniest work. Now in this one the great comedian has even more opportunities. As an amateur government detective who can't get out of the ballot when the war is over, he is funnier than he ever has been before.

Cosmopolitan Production, "BUREAU TREASURE," with Marion Davies

A modern story of a girl who lived a hundred lives. Spectacular, thrilling, combining the romance of old times in a drama of New York today. One of the most unusual plots ever imagined, super directed.

Sir James M. Barrie's "SENTIMENTAL TOMMY," a John S. Robertson production

An all star cast, headed by Gareth Hughes, Mabel Taliaferro, May McAvoy and George Paaeurt, under direction of the man who made "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," makes of Barrie's delightful story a photoplay so rich in comedy and pathos and beauty that it will remain an imperishable memory.

William D. Taylor's Production, "THE WITCHING HOUR," with Elliott Dexter

Augustus Thomas' success, even more timely now than when it ran for a year on the stage. An unforgettable dramatic novelty, every scene in charged with emotion, and every thrill intensified on the screen.

Douglas MacLean in "THE HOME STRETCH," Thos. H. Ince Production

MacLean's comedy characterizations have already won the hearts of the entire American public. This is a race-track story of an unusual type, full of situations ludicrous but human, rollicking but real.

Wallace Reid in "THE LOVE SPECIAL," with Agnes Ayres

It's got all the thrill of "Always Audacious," "What's Your Hurry?" and "The Valley of the Giants" rolled into one. The ride for life in the plugging express train is the biggest thrill ever filmed.

Hugh Ford British Production, "THE GREAT DAY," with Arthur Bouchier

From the big Drury Lane melodrama. Made in England, Scotland, the Alps, Paris and Switzerland by an American director. A stirring melodrama With all Europe for its stage.
Wanger Out?
Wang as Production Manager for Famous Players—Effective April 16
Walter Wanger, production man for Famous Players, will leave organization, according to reports. He has tendered his resignation, effective April 16, it is said.
Wanger has been production manager on 5th Ave. practically since Whitman Bennett resigned to form the independent production.

Goldwyn Coming Back
Samuel Goldwyn is expected back in New York on Sunday, according to reports.

New Randolph Record
Chicago—the Randolph broke all records last week with "The Gross business was 32% more.

Smith Bound for Sweden
Croswell Smith, head of the Vaudeville department, is expected to leave for Sweden where he will remain for about three weeks. He has been there all told about six weeks.

Holubar Film Opens
"Man-Woman-Marriage" the Allen Holubar production opened last night at the Strand, Paterson, N. J. Mr. Holubar was there with Dorothy Phillips, Mrs. as number one of the First NationalDirs.

Victor Fleming Back
Victor Fleming returned from California yesterday with approximately $10,000 spent on a special shot on the coast for "Wife Insurance," the popular Loos production. The picture will go into the cutting room today.

Comedy-drama, spectacular, melodrama—the biggest production and the greatest achievement of Mack Sennett's career is "A Small Town Idol," an immediate sensation. It has been sold to Associated Producers, Inc.—Advt.

Griffith's Next
D. W. Griffith has found enough material in the story he is now belting out to make another special picture. It is expected to be one of the biggest productions of its kind. Several scenes which were originally intended for minor action have been enlarged to provide for hundreds of extras.

So far no news has been given the production, other than the working title, "Flaming Lamps." It is based on incidents in the Limehouse Nights stories, from which came the plot for "Broken Blossoms." But the production plans at present but, it is expected it would enter the producing field in the near future.

Ballance Promoted
Sidney R. Kent announced yesterday the appointment of H. G. Ballance to the position of general sales manager, the position which Kent himself recently relinquished when he became head of the Famous Players distributing activities. The appointment takes effect immediately, Ballance coming to his new duties from Boston, where he has been district manager in charge of the Boston and New Haven exchanges.

Shallenberger to Coast
W. E. Shallenberger of Arrow Film leaves for the coast early next week.

Elsie Ferguson Back
Eliee Ferguson is back in New York from the coast where she made "Sacred and Profane Love."

New Rivoli Record

Cecil B. DeMille's "Forbidden Fruit" broke all records at the Rivoli on Sunday by just $584, shattering the figures for both the Rivoli and Rialto. The attendance was greater than those which saw the three previous record breakers at the Rivoli, "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," "Male and Female" and "The Testing Block."

Mr. Wanger stated that there will be more specials by John Robertson and Charles Malgrave, who, he said, have been temporarily switched to the direction of Realart stars. Wanger stated, however, that that condition would be a temporary one, only.

Best W. Friedman Talks of His Recent Trip to America—Says Some Things Plainly

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

London—Ernest W. Friedman of Film Reuter and M. P. News, has returned from a wonderful year-end issue of his publication, tells of the impressions he received of the American film business and what he was in the United States.

He says in part:

"Millions of dollars are lavished on pictures, many hundred thousands of them in gross waste, but all expended in the one great endeavor to put before the pleasure-hungry public of America the greatest entertainment in the world.

They are the remnants in America, many of them on a grand scale, but at least it can be said that profit to the foreign markets. Foreign markets are to them a very desirable asset, but catered for in a business-like way.

The American picture industry is not alone to blame for the world's film market, and the American film industry is fortunate in having a loyal and appreciative public. The American film is far from being a second-rate product, and his exhibition is not at fault. The American exhibitor is doing his best to meet the situation, but the public has been slow to appreciate his efforts.

The exhibitor has always had to fight for his film hire, and this opposition does not show when they are in the average show. A show here is simply an argument about business. They keep their business, and are not merely the medium for throwing pictures on the screen. The exhibition in the film market is as important to America as the production is to the film industry. They have made the motion picture industry what it is today: a live business in which millions of dollars are invested.

"They have proved to the financier its possibilities, and money can be obtained in Wall Street to any amount for the film production. Even today, when there is a world shortage of wealth, the American producer has comparatively little difficulty in obtaining what he wants.

"Over here the situation has been handled wrongly. It has got into the hands of men who do not believe in the potentialities of the film. They have been driven for profit, not for the art of film production. Even today, when there is a world shortage of wealth, the American producer has comparatively little difficulty in obtaining what he wants.

"America stands alone and triumphant. She has gained her position by recognizing the cinema's wonderful possibilities. Thanks to the work of the American exhibitor, the American film has been introduced to the world.

"EASTMAN" and "KODAK" are stenciled in the film margin so that all Eastman Film may be instantly identified.

That Reichenbach Man

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Boston—Harry Reichenbach came up from New York to arrange for the opening of "Outside the Law" at the Park.

Harry managed to get a street car, had it all painted up with grotesque figures and sent the affair off over every car line in Greater Boston. He combined his advertising of the picture with an appeal to put over the Hoover Relief Fund.

"Outside the Law" has been booked over the U. B. O. circuit of theaters.
MOTION PICTURE DAY, WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 26th

Daily Doings of Hoover's Doers

Edited by the A. M. P. A. Publicity Committee.

Phila. Defies New York

In tense rivalry has developed between the motion picture interests of Philadelphia and of New York over the outcome of Motion Picture Day, Wednesday, Jan. 26, which is being observed nationally in behalf of the American Red Cross' drive to help the starving children of Central and Eastern Europe. Philadelphia has, in fact, challenged the metropolitan to make a better showing than the Quaker City, so confident are they of the future of the motion picture industry. So confident, in fact, that they have sent on a delegation to New York with the idea of making a stand for motion pictures for the next week. The delegation was sent by S. L. Rothafel, manager of the Capitol, to New York, to say that the motion picture industry has come of age.

The delegation, which consisted of Jules Mastbaum, head of the great Stanley Theaters Co.; S. L. Rothafel, manager of the Capitol, to New York; and Mrs. Goldie Goldstein, assistant manager of the Capitol, to New York, will begin their campaign for funds for the Hoover Children's Relief Committee on Wednesday, and will try to get the people of New York to increase their support of the drive.

We are all, in our power to stimulate interest in this worthy project, and in order that this may be increased, we hereby challenge you to equal or beat the record we made in Philadelphia. We have strings to this challenge, for we have worked with our workers, and know how hard it is to get a big fund in each city. No matter who wins, we will have the satisfaction of having done a most substantial bit for the fund, and thus aid the deserving children.

Yours truly,

JULES E. MASTBAUM,
Chairman Phila. Committee.

Playhouse Plans
And W. W. Irwin's Connection Told of by A. W. Johnson

Interesting testimony by Arland W. Johnson, an architect and originator of the idea of a chain of houses through which the National Playhouse Corp. was formed to build, has been given in the Supreme Court in the suit by Walter W. Irwin to recover a share of the profits which he believes Johnson and Harvey H. Hevenor made.

Johnson testified before the trial that after he had planned the chain of theaters he talked with Irwin in December, 1919, and Irwin said he and his clients would finance the project. They met Hevenor and it was agreed on commissions, but the memorandum concerning it disappeared from his desk last July, he said. He said the corporation issued $300,000 in notes to him for his contracts for theaters, which he said Irwin appraised at $300,000. About $12,000 in notes was given to Hevenor for money he advanced.

Asked concerning the value of the contracts Johnson said a Mrs. Hayes in Boston planned to erect a theater there, in the Siegel building, part of which was to be occupied by a hotel, and the theater was to rent for $95,000 a year. The people planning it are ready to go ahead with it now, he said, and want $250,000. He said Mrs. Hayes told him she put up $100,000 to bind the contract.

Johnson also testified that he has an option on property at New Rochelle for $30,000 less than it is worth, and $200,000 is needed for the building. Other plans he made were to lease a building in Pittsburg at Wood and 5th St., and he had a tentative contract with the Stabler interests in Buffalo for a theatre. A theater as part of the International Hotel property at Niagara Falls was also projected, he said.

"I had the courtesy to give Mr. Irwin a desk in my office when he had no place to go," said Johnson. "He did not spend a nickel or any of his time on the plan. We had agreed to go fifty-fifty; he is financed the proposition on which I had put all my time. He never talked he would put in a million, and at our first meeting we decided $2,000,000 was needed."

The International Film Service Co. has filed an answer in the Supreme Court to the suit of the Exte Studios and Liberatories, Inc. to recover $2,500 rent. It alleges that the plaintiff promised one Sistrum, an agent of the company, $150 a week from April to September, during the period of the lease, for bringing about its execution, but the defendant vacated the premises July 1. It is alleged that the plaintiff gave Sistrum a check for $500, and that this action was in violation of the Penal Law.

The International Film Service has been sued by George Gregory La Cava for $100,000 under a contract by which he was engaged as a specialist in hand-drawn cartoons, to make films of subjects given him by the defendant.

Chaplin In "The Kid"
Beats Chicago Box Office Records 100 per cent.

Randolph Theatre Profits 50% Higher First Day; 60% Second Day; 100% Third Day—Picture Held for Indefinite Run—Newspapers Go Wild With Praise

SIX REELS LIKE ONE
"The Kid" settles once and for all the question as to who is the greatest theatrical artist in the world. Chaplin does some of the finest, most delicately shaded acting you ever saw anywhere, and for every slapstick furor in it there is a classic, exquisite scene. His actions are risqué, convulsively irresistible. The picture is perfection, six reels that seem like one; six reels that are funnier than the work of any other human being."—Chicago Herald and Examiner.

ALL TOO SHORT
"In a class all by himself is Charles Chaplin. Nothing can dim his charm. There are loads of laughs in 'The Kid' and some tears, too. More real acting than you have ever seen in a Chaplin picture before. The 'Kid' is six reels long, which is too short."—Chicago Daily Tribune.

WORDS ARE INADEQUATE
"Totally unlike any other comedy ever filmed, Chaplin proves himself not only a great comedian, but an astute showman. I do not know another comedian who could combine tears and smiles and real slapstick. If a reviewer might recall all the laudatory terms ever bestowed and combine them here, adequate comment might be made."—Chicago Daily Journal.

MOST NOVEL AND ORIGINAL
"The 'Kid' is Chaplin's best and most novel film. See for yourself if he doesn't come back in great shape with the best and most original thing he has yet contributed to the screen."—Chicago American.

GREATEST ARTIST IN WORLD
"The Kid" is a masterpiece and will please all. Those who claim Chaplin is the world's greatest actor either in silent or speaking drama, now have an exhibit for their argument. There is a thrill about watching his masterly work. From the first click the action is on. It is cinema art clear through. As an artist Chaplin is more consequential in extent of audience than any speaking, singing, writing or painting artist today."—Chicago Daily News.

A SUPER COMEDY
"Everyone is due to be pleased. A real story, a mixture of tears and laughter. It is a super-comedy with touches of exquisite feeling."
—Chicago Evening Post.

new story is greater in scope than "Broken Blossoms," and the time Griffith is spending on it, and the larger and more expensive cast, are the same indications that forebode the coming of his other specials.

Another indication that "Flaming Lamps" will be a big Griffith special is the cast now at work on the studio at Maranacook. These players include Tyrone Power, W. J. Ferguson, Carol Dempster, Ralph Graves, George Neville, Vivia Ogle, Agnes Fleming, Betty Hitchens, Charles Mack, Porter Strong and Kathlen Ardell.

Censors in Bay State?
New Measure Filed in Boston—Almost Identical With 1920 Bill
Boston—Renewal of the campaign for censorship in Massachusetts is threatened by the filing in the legislature of a measure designed to overcome such objections as were raised last year by the attorney-general and upon which Governor Coolidge vetoed the 1920 bill after it had been passed by the House and Senate. The new bill was filed on behalf of the State Committee on Motion Pictures, which represents 394 organizations in the commonwealth.

The measure just introduced is with slight changes, the compromise bill which was drawn up by a special committee of five members of the 1920 legislature. It passed both branches of the legislature but was vetoed by the governor on the opinion of the attorney-general that it was unconstitutional. Such changes as to meet the objections of the attorney-general have been made and the bill brought up to date.

Under the provisions of the measure the censorship rests with the Department of Public Safety which now examines and passes upon all the films exhibited on Sundays.

The measure provides for the appointment of a paid director to be in charge of the work, and to have three censors reviewing films eight hours a day for five days a week. There is an appeal to the director in charge of the work and from him to the commissioner of Public Safety. The rights of the industry are to be safeguarded by an appeal to the Superior Court sitting in equity.

It is estimated that it would cost $40,350 to establish and maintain it one year. The yearly revenue is estimated at $62,400, at the rate of $2 per reel.

Features Only
for which Associated First National contracted with Mr. Chaplin.

"The balance of Mr. Chaplin's contract now calls for three two reel subjects. Upon the delivery of these three productions by Mr. Chaplin to Associated First National the contract between the two will have been fulfilled.

"Immediately upon terminating his contract with Associated First National, Mr. Chaplin will become permanent in the feature production field, aiming for the same standard as it is believed he has established with 'The Kid,' at the same time he will become actively engaged as a member of the United Artists Corp., comprising Mary Pickford, D. W. Griffith, Charlie Chaplin and Douglas Fairbanks, and he will devote all of his efforts to the making of feature productions."

Chaplin has taken full control of his plant where to date the DeHaven's have been working. His present organization contains practically all of the people who have been identified with him for some years past.

Edna Purviance will continue in Chaplin's support. The business end of the company will be in the hands of A. Reeves, who has been studio manager for the past two years. Charles Levin will head the laboratory department and Joseph Van Meter, the purchasing department, Carlyle Robinson, who was with Chaplin in the Lone Star and earlier First National days is back as director of publicity.

The company plans to erect a chain of theaters in northern New Jersey, it is stated that several sites have already been secured, one at Monticello and one at Brickshopp St., Jersey City, which, according to Laurence Weber, who is connected with the company, a $1,000,000 theater will be constructed. Another site for a theater in Jersey City has also been secured.

Weber stated yesterday a site had been secured for a third house in Hoboken on which a theater is to be built (Continued on Page 4).

Hart to Retire?

(Special to WID's DAILY)

Los Angeles—The report persists that William S. Hart will retire from the screen when he completes his present production, his last under the contract for Famous Players-Lasky.

Mr. Hart in talks with film men, is said to have expressed his determination to retire on the ground that he is well off financially and that the picture business has worked long enough to earn a rest.

A local publication states that Hart plans to write a series of stories dealing with western life and quotes him as saying:

"I think the time has arrived when I should take a rest. I have passed through some grilling experiences during the last few years. If I can't write some books that will interest the youth of America I shall feel that I am accomplishing a good work. So when my next picture is finished I will try to become a full-fledged writer-filer."

Three in New Deal

Film folk were interested yesterday in reading that the directors of the Shubert Advanced Vaudeville Circuit included Jules E. Masefield, of the Shubert Co. of America, F. J. Goddard of Goldwyn and Edward J. Bowers of the Capitol Theater. The concern has $20,000,000 capital and will compete for vaudeville prestige with the Keith interests, who now dominate the field.

When Mr. Goddard was asked yesterday whether this in any way affected his picture interests he said he did not.

Mr. Bowers left for the Coast on Monday and it is understood will visit a number of cities in the new vaudeville circuit will have houses.

Tippett May Go to Coast

A New Los Angeles

Sidney Garrett Holds Option on Site for Studio in Southern England—

Talks of Conditions

Sidney Garrett, just back from England, has plans under way for what he terms an "English Los Angeles." He has secured an option on 200 acres of land at Bournemouth, County of Hampshire, in Southern England, and about 130 miles from London.

Here he plans, with the aid of local capital, to erect studios and make them the producing headquarters in England for all companies. Garrett states that producing in London is not feasible because of the prevalence of fogs there. In Bournemouth and in all of that section of England, he says fogs are not as frequent and as a consequence production is not subject to delaying delays.

Speaking of conditions in general in England, Garrett said yesterday:

"It is my plan that unless American manufacturers adjust themselves to the conditions that prevail on the foreign markets that manufacturers in other countries are doing that in the future American pictures will lose

Only Two Taylor Specials

Realart will distribute only two William D. Taylor specials and not four which were originally announced. Those already released are "The Furnace" and "Soul of Youth."

John S. Woody of Realart stated that it was discovered that the company had too much product on its hands and that responsibility had switched the remaining specials to Paramount. One, "The Witching Hour," will be released in April.

Cl Meredith Commits Suicide

(Special to WID's DAILY)

Los Angeles—Hannibal N. Clement was found dead in his home on Hollywood Blvd. on Sunday. He was president of the Clement Photoplay Company in the 1910's, when he was succeeded by C. P. Biscoe of Hollywood.

It was reported at the time Clement resigned the presidency of the corporation that its financial obligations were very pressing and some believe that it was for this reason that Clement made way with himself. Before entering the picture field he was a special representative and efficiency engineer for the Burroughs Adding Machine Co. He was with that company for five years.

whichever prestige or circulation that they have bought for the past five or six years.

The crippled resources of the war stricken nations do not allow them to produce pictures where the sum of the sets that they were paying for was considerably lower, but the number of pictures to be sent abroad this year will be still lower. This has not been brought about by the fact that the American pictures are not as good, as I think they are better than any of the foreign pictures, but that the prices asked for them is the rate of exchange of today, and other conditions prevailing forces the buyer to obtain merchandise that their purses will allow. In fact the world in general is trying to get back to business like methods and I think the day here in America has come to that way of thinking, more especially with your own business. I think even America will be importing 25% of its domestic pictures probably at the foreign pictures owing to the cost of pictures and trade conditions being unsettled.

Stars Who'll Do It

Never have motion picture stars undertaken to appear in person before a committee to help a cause. The situation is as urgent as on Wednesday. At least forty of the topnotch film players are at the present time in the East. Almost without exception they have enlisted to aid the observance of Motion Picture Day. A committee from the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, working with Chairman S. L. Rothafel and the Greater New York Committee of the film industry’s organization to “help Hoover,” has managed to get these featured players away from their busy engagements. Headed by Bert Adler, Chairman, Maurie Meyers and Nat Rothstein, volunteer A.

Well, Boys, All Together!

Today Greater New York shows where it stands on benevolence. The motion picture interests of every branch nationally have united to make this—Wednesday, Jan. 26, 1927—a red letter day in the annals of humanity. And it is to Greater New York to jump in and make its own part so outstanding that its laurels will be unquestioned.

The important bulk of the metropolitan picture houses have pledged themselves to observe the day. Their today. For this effort will go far in behalf of European Relief. Their screens will carry the message of mercy and help for famine-ridden childhood abroad; their box offices will be agencies for the sale of benefit tickets to next Saturday morning’s show. Motion picture stars of this day will meet their audiences with a message of appeal. Each co-operation is offered to the workers from the six humanitarian organizations who are working with the exhibitors and with the producers and distributors of film, to interest the public today in the donated shows of Saturday. With all this, the local industry’s quota ought to be made, and to spare.

But—

It means attention and hard work on the part of all. Any picture house that has so far not pledged itself, or that has made other arrangements, or that has neglected to decorate its lobby, or that has omitted to invite the public and workers in the heartiest of spirit—holds back the whole plan of the day. To make the result a cinch, there should be work throughout the week, and every inch of work acceptable.

Greater New York has been challenged as a competitor in well-doing by Philadelphia. When it is considered that New York has an overwhelming advantage in theaters and in active film people, the challenge appears absurd. However, Jules E. Mastbaum, who burnished the def from its heart of the Quaker City, is not to be disregarded in a matter of this kind. Chairman Rothafel of the New York Committee does not understate him, and although he answered the challenge warmly, wants to see the challenger squashed under any doubt of rivalry in benevolence. It is for the metropolis to show its mettle, and the struggle is directly up to the Gotham film people as conductors of this day’s drive.

It is to be hoped that the midnight gathering at the Capitol Theater after today’s work has been done will be an occasion for congratulation. This elaborate affair includes the workers and the great donors toward the European Relief. Herbert Hoover will speak, and Walter Damrosch is to conduct a chorus of 150 voices from the Oratorio Society of New York. This affair is strictly by invitation and will be high-class in every particular. One of New York’s most brilliant audiences will gather at the triumphal film people.

M. P. A.’s will escort small groups of the stars around circuits of picture houses. The rallying point is the Orangery Room of the Hotel Astor, from which the groups will be dispatched.

In the New York theaters the stars will work in co-operation with the volunteer corps of workers from various humanitarian societies, directed by Mrs. Paul Faure, the experienced head. It is expected that the united efforts of the players, the volunteer workers and the theater men will put over the sale of 50,000 special benefit performance tickets which are redeemable in admissions to the morning shows of Jan. 29 in the picture houses.

Every producing and distributing organization in the country has already endorsed its exchange members, salesmen, and all other employees into working tooth and nail for the success of the great humanitarian movement which is to be symbolized by the industry’s support on Motion Picture Day, Jan. 26.

Ends Her Fast Today

Mary Schaefer, 16, who entered on a 10 days “sympathy fast” in behalf of the starving children in Central and Eastern Europe, ends that fast today. All exchanges agree to furnish programs free. Newspapers giving wonderful co-operation. Looks like a big success. Theater employees should be especially commended for their readiness to donate their services to this great cause.

RALPH TALBOT, Chairman Oklahoma.

TODAY is the DAY

HORACE Judge—for good counsel and activity.

Getting the Money

The Hoover Drive for the relief of starving European children, in which the motion picture industry is actively interested at present, is receiving an added forward thrust through a new plan for assistance conceived by Pioneer Film Corp.

The idea germinated in the brain of Jack Bellman, Pioneer’s New York exchange manager, several days ago and has been put into effect with highly satisfactory results.

The plan is this:

Pioneer office staff from the chief executive down to the office boy consists of rabid movie fans who throng the projection room every time a new production is shown. Bellman conceived the idea of charging admission and sending the gross receipts to the Hoover Committee. It is a pleasing commentary upon the spirit of the Pioneer organization and the quality of Pioneer productions to know that the projection room attendance is holding up strongly and shows no signs of weakening. The admission charge is fixed at fifty cents and the present outlook is that the total amount raised will reach a substantial sum before the end of the drive.

Checks Coming In

As an evidence of the publicity given Motion Picture Day, Hoover fund checks have been coming in from individual citizens in the vicinity of New York to Motion Picture National Headquarters. C. C. Pettijohn of the National Executive Committee is turning these contributions into the film credit column of the European Relief.

A lot of people are trying to spread the idea that the extorted idea is not the idea itself and the Almighty Dollar. We can use the dollars, but let’s show them that our hearts are as big as theirs, and maybe a wee bit bigger.

And Eight More in May!

EIGHT more b g ones, eight more sure money makers, because built of the best available star, author and director material.

Here are the productions that will crowd your house during the month of May:

Thomas Meighan in "THE CITY OF SILENT MEN"

This is the biggest picture Meighan ever made. With many scenes made in Sing Sing Prison, and telling a dramatic and unforgettable story of a hunted man. It's even bigger than "The Prince Chapp" in heart appeal.

Cosmopolitan Production, "PROXIES"

William S. Hart in "THE WHISTLE," Hart Production

Another Hart picture as big as "The Testing Block." The star plays a he-man role again, and there are fights, thrills and sensations by the dozen—and lots of heart interest, too.

Dorothy Gish in "OH JOI!"

A small comedy that is as real and funny as "Seventeen." Comic that will make any audience laugh the way through. Full of little touches that you'll remember a long time.

Sidney Chaplin in "KING QUEEN JOKER," Chaplin Production

The famous comedian's first big picture since "The Submarine Pirate." A laugh spectacle of titanic proportions. The "Bent Hur" of screen comedy.

Lois Weber's Production, "MARRIED STRANGERS"

The one problem in which everyone is interested is marriage. The success of every great picture on this subject is sufficient evidence of this. Miss Weber goes deeper than most producers into her themes. This is her finest production.

Elise Ferguson in "SACRED AND PROFANE LOVE," a William D. Taylor Production

Arnold Bennett's great novel and play, in which Miss Ferguson appeared last year on the stage. Produced by a great director. A rare and fortunate combination of top notch talent makes this film of the year's certain successes.

William DeMille's Production of Sir James M. Barrie's famous play, "WHAT EVERY WOMAN KNOWS"

With the exception of "Peter Pan" this was Maude Adams' greatest stage success, and Barrie's most successful play. Produced as...
Expect One in April

From D. W. Griffith for United Artists' Program—Will Be the Third Picture

United Artists expect to release in April a D. W. Griffith production. This will be the third picture from Mr. Griffith for the "Big Four" program, the first two having been "Broken Blossoms" and "The Love Flower.

It is expected that the production will be one upon which the producer is now at work in Mamaroneck. The matter has not as yet been definitely decided. It is possible that the picture will be released through Griffith's own service in the nature of a special, such as "Way Down East," which was the first instance of fact, earlier in the year Griffith offices stated that it would go out as a special. It is probable that it was placed in production the United Artists program was in mind.

Westerns Popular
With State Rights, Say Dominant Pictures—Results of Questionnaire

Dominant Pictures Corp., through a questionnaire conducted with state right exchanges all over the country, finds that westerns are popular in all sections of the country except in New England and New York. The results of the questionnaire are as follows:

The replies from the southern territory comprising Alabama, Georgia, Florida, North and South Carolina, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas and Tennessee and the southwestern territory indicate a strong demand for Westerns in Western and Northwestern features as well as westerns of short length.

District of Columbia, Delaware, Maryland and Virginia evinced a strong interest for this same type. In both of these territories there is a big demand for big productions which lend themselves ready to exploitation.

The response from Pennsylvania, West Virginia and New Jersey indicates a great demand for Westerns and virile outdoor dramas which contain plenty of action.

The demand for westerns extends clearly through the entire West and Northwest, and from the replies received demonstrates that this is the most popular type of picture in the independent market.

Independents in New England, New York and Eastern Pennsylvania express a desire for society dramas which have a leaning towards Westerns do not go so well in these territories.

Other territories require high-class two-reel comedies. One-reel slapstick comedies are in big demand everywhere.

Putting It Over

_*Special to WID'S DAILY*_

Today, how about 10,000 cents—how about 10,000 scents. That many were used to help put over Paramount's "Heliotrope" at the Rialto."

Along with Manager John J. Cregid and R. C. Cary, cartoonist and exploitation agent on the Famous Players staff, got 3,000 postal cards from New York, each bearing the picture of a leading hotel. These were addressed to Omahas and a message written on them by a lot of pretty girls employed for the purpose, the message reading: "Just learned Heliotrope Harry is out and will be in Omaha week of Jan. 16—Hastily, Betty," all in big writing. The cards were then sent to New York and mailed back to the Omahas. The same plan was worked with postcards showing pictures of the leading hotels in Chicago.

Next, there were 3,000 heliotrope scented bottles distributed by the Rialto. The stunt was carried on for four days. The usual big newspaper stuff was employed, 10,000 heralds were distributed and so many twenty-four bottles were put up that it was impossible to count them. Cary, with his usual artistic sense of humor, carpeted the mysterious appearance of Heliotrope Harry and ran the cartoons in the Omaha papers for a good story.

Los Angeles—A distinct type of exploitation was carried out by managing director Robert E. Wells, for the opening of the New Mission, for which he always hit big ideas, "The Mark of Zorro." The whole theater fairly was bathed in the atmosphere of the "Golden Age of Romance." Upon alighting from your car there met you, two footmen in the band costume that "Doug" wears as Zorro in the picture, and ushering you to the door, you were greeted by Spanish flower girls with huge baskets of violets, who distributed them to the ladies, together with fans and mantillas. Great banquets of flowers decorated the lobby and the interior of the theater. The ushers were colorfully costumed in velvet costumes and crimson sashes. The atmosphere was harmoniously carried out in the lighted, flower-wreathed Spanish balconies, and the twin fountains on each side of the stage.

The opening night was a gala one even for Los Angeles. All the "Who's Who" of the cinema blue books were numbered in the audience.

Colorado Springs, Colo.—The chief exploitation stunt of J. E. Tompkins, manager of the Liberty, in connection with the showing of "Earth-bound" was an unusual lobby display. In front of the ticket booth was a large revolving globe, showing the continents and oceans of the earth. The globe was constructed of a wire frame covered with heavy cloth. A mechanism devised to keep it revolving was obtained for $25. As the globe revolved, passers-by read one of three signs: "Earth-bound," "No, no sign," "Earth-bound, No future life." "Earth-bound," Now playing." Two large lights at the extreme left and right of the lobby were for casting a direct abundance of light upon the revolving earth. The panels on the left and right lobes were painted to resemble the heavens and the steller constellations.

Alliance, O.—"The other fellow one better" is the motto of Lee Smith, of the Smith Amusement Co., operating the New Columbia and the Ideal here and the Strand in Scherrin. O. Smith, when he prepared to play "While New York Sleeps" started off down something different for his lobby.

With few exceptions, exhibitors who thus far have played this film have always hit upon the idea of using the center of the attractive 24 sheet and building a cut-out of Dolores in "Devil's Seacoast gown.

Smith went along the other fellows one better—or maybe a few better, by adding to the cut-out an electrical display which made it a success at the Prolix. The wandering meander attracting much attention.

San Francisco,—A tinker who moved about in the lobby constantly during the run of Universal's "Once a Plumber," helped make it a success at the Prolix. The wandering meander attracting much attention.

Arliss Socks Damages

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Albany, N. Y.—Arguments have been presented before the Court of Appeals in the action of George Arliss against the Herbert Biron Film Corp. The matter came up on appeal from a judgment entered in New York County, May 5, 1919, upon an order of the Appellate Division affirming a judgment entered Dec. 22, 1917. The action was brought to recover damages for the breach of a contract, whereby it was mutually agreed that the company employ Arliss in "Faisst" for $22,500. The answer was a general denial.

Miss Jacobs, manager of the Pat Casey Theatre Agency, handled the negotiations. The details were arranged but the film company did not avail itself of Arliss' services.

GAUSMAN

The Real Hope

“The demand for big productions with elaborate sets and large casts is, I believe, the real hope held out for those who find themselves unemployed at this time. The quantity output of the past four years will not again be met, therefore in the theatres there are enough theatres to handle such an output. Producers, I think, have learned that having longer boost of the number of pictures they intend to release, but rather of the magnitude as to size and quality of each film they put on.”—Marshall Neilan.

Maigue Film at Rialto

Wrangle Over “Passion Flower”
The question of copyright protection of English translations covering picture rights is involved in a motion before the Supreme Court in Brooklyn brought by John G. Underhill, who claims the sole rights for English translations of the works of Jean Benavente, the Spanish novel and playwright. He seeks to have the producers of a picture version of “The Passion Flower,” in which Norma Shearer is cast, show cause why they should not be restrained on the ground of infringement.

The defendants, Joseph Schenck and Richard Crooks, claim that the copyright rights were bought in Paris. Justice Kapper has reserved decision.

Censorship in Duluth
(Special to WID’S DAILY)
Duluth—The agitation of the Better Films Committee has prompted the dissolution of a local organization. A. Nelson, president of the Duluth Theater Managers’ Ass’n, in which he says that censorship is a national issue, not a local one. He declares that local regulation would be unjust and result in undue hardship for the theatre men.

Censorship as advocated here would make it unlawful to show pictures ridiculing religion, law, or moral standards, such as obscene, indecent, inhuman, gruesome, or which would tend to impair health, or corrupt morals.

What of “The Kid”? Brand Wants it for Two Weeks, But Trouble Comes Because of Existant Contracts With Loew

A rather peculiar situation has arisen along Broadway over the showing of “The Kid,” the Strand, as the First National has naturally secured the picture as a regular matter, at the theater management stands ready to book the picture for a second week if it is guaranteed protection. The Loew circuit holds contract with First National for the showing of all pictures of the Chaplin series immediately after they close a week’s run at the Strand. The latter plans to hold the opposition not only from Loew but also the first run exhibitors on Broadway, if it decides to play the picture again.

For that reason the executive offices of First National, it is understood, are taking the matter up with those who hold contracts for the Chaplin series to ascertain if these interests agree to a second week at the Strand before following out the terms of their contracts. If an agreement is reached, the picture will play for two weeks at the Strand. If not, it remains there for the week and then goes into other roadshow theaters.

Herbert Hoover spoke, telling of the work of his organization, and C. C. Pettijohn told of how the picture drive was progressing all over the country, reading telegrams from various cities. In behalf of the industry he presented these wires to Hoover on a handsome silver platter inscribed especially for Mr. Hoover.

Mr. Pettijohn’s mind was made easier yesterday morning when he received a wire from chairman Bing-Ham in Indianapolis, advising him that the Hoosier state was in line for its share. The wire came too late to be presented to Mr. Hoover with the others. For those who don’t know, C. C. comes from Indianapolis.

artistic

PHOTOGRAPHY ................ Excellent

LIGHTINGS ................... Also excellent

INTERIORS .......... Some exceptionally unusual sets

DETAIL ................. Good but sometimes there’s too much of it

CHARACTER OF STORY .......... Young wife who supports husband and is true to him even after she falls in love with one who really loves her

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .......... 7,804 feet

In “Forbidden Fruit,” Cecil B. DeMille has another of his spectacular extravaganzas which is perhaps even more lavish than its predecessors. There is probably not more than a few hundred feet in the whole 7,804 that is not a direct appeal to the eye. DeMille has a peculiar facility for taking the most commonplace situations and dressing them up in fancy attire so as to make a really artistic and entertaining picture of them.

Jeanie Macpherson’s story is not a wonder of itself and there’s nothing in it that is obviously new to the screen. It’s the same old marriage question. Shall a woman remain true to her husband even though she has married “for the worse?” According to strict “movie” formula she should, because the unworthy husband is sure to die conviently and allow the faithful wife to marry her patient lover who is Johnny-on the-job for the finale. But the story isn’t going to matter much for DeMille has transformed it into a modern Cinderella fantasy with shots of the palace ball room and other artistic replicas of the fairy tale.
However, despite his ability to do such fine things with such situations, there are perhaps not a few who would like to see a producer with such capabilities as DeMille, take a story from married life that is not always an obsolete case, one more of the everyday variety, and produce it; a simple story, simply told.

Just as clothes make the woman, so does the production often make the picture and not alone in the money spent to make it but in the players secured, does “Forbidden Fruit” base its appeal. Agnes Ayres as the modern Cinderella is charming and knows how to wear clothes. The entire cast is excellent.

Mrs. Mallory persuades Mary Maddock, her seamstress, to take the place of an absent guest at her dinner party. Gorgeously gowned, and very beautiful, Mary wins the heart of Nelson Rogers, who eventually asks her to marry him. Mary realizes what she is missing by remaining faithful to her abusive, idle husband whom she supports. After a final insult from him she remains with the Mallory’s. During the night she is awakened and finds her husband, a burglar, stealing Mrs. Mallory’s jewels.

Maddock escapes, but Mary tells Rogers the man is her husband. She refuses the suggestion of divorce and returns to Maddock, who then blackmails Rogers for $10,000, which he is to divide with his crook parter. In a fight over the money the partner kills Madddock, leaving Mary free to marry Rogers.

Should Make Lots of Money For You

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

If pictures were divided into two classes, one notable for heart interest and human appeal regardless of the production accorded, and another consisting of pictures marvelously and extravagantly beautiful to look at—it this were the case “Forbidden Fruit” would undoubtedly head the second group for it is probably the most lavish and splendidly made picture of the year.

It should be well worth your while to secure the picture if possible for it’s really well worth while seeing. And anyone who is interested in the artistic work of DeMille and has enjoyed his previous productions will certainly want to see this. It should’t be necessary to offer any suggestions for exploiting or advertising this. DeMille’s name, and the title which certainly has no small drawing power, together with the names of the entire cast should be sufficient to satisfy anyone who is at all interested in motion pictures.

SCENARIO BY ...................... Edward J. Montague

DIRECTION ......................... Excellent
PHOTOGRAPHY ..................... Satisfactory
LIGHTINGS........ Usually all right; not always sharp

SUPPORT........ Fine cast; all do splendid work
EXTERIORS ......................... Few of them
INTERIORS ......................... Correct
DETAL ......................... Good
CHARACTER OF STORY ............ Typifies ideal type of mother whose happiness is shattered when her son is accused of a murder
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .......... About 5,800 feet

It is quite often the case that a picture made along the lines of some previously successful picture of the same type, doesn't come up to the original. But "The Greatest Love" is sufficient proof that such is not always the case. The same element of mother love and the same atmosphere of the East Side and later the uptown section, is evident as it was in "Humoresque." This is not to infer by any means that "The Greatest Love" does not succeed on its own merit. It does.

Vera Gordon is essentially the picture's main appeal.

Her performance is unusual and her emotional bits cause the chunks in your throat. She is undoubtedly without equal in the portrayal of a certain type of motherhood.

The direction of the picture is excellent, perhaps the best that Henry Kolker has ever done. The production is common sense all the way through, inexpensive but real and effective. One noteworthy bit is the manner in which the trial scene is handled. Instead of the customary long shot of the courtroom, the family of the convicted youth are shown waiting for the verdict of the jury in an adjoining room and just a glimpse of the courtroom is shown through a half open door. There is one short sequence which they have neglected to tint. The players are shown in evening clothes in a garden but the lighting would indicate daytime.

Mrs. Lantini, an Italian immigrant mother, is the personification of "The Greatest Love"—mother love. With her husband and two children, a boy and a girl, she seeks happiness in the "promised land." Time passes and through the success of the son Lorenzo, who has become an architect, Mrs. Lantini is happy in her uptown apartment, although she still wears her apron and fusses about the house despite the servants.

Lorenzo is engaged by Richard Sewell, a theatrical manager, to draw the plans for his new theatre. Francesca meets Sewell who offers to lend her a costume for a charity fete at which she is to dance. But the unscrupulous Sewell is merely laying a trap and Francesca returns to her home and confides in Lorenzo who goes to the manager's office where he finds him dead. Lorenzo is accused and found guilty but later freed when Sewell's discarded wife confesses the murder.

Your Own Fault if You Can't Clean Up with This

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor.

The fact that "The Greatest Love" is another "Humoresque" should boost it rather than injure it. Those who saw the former mother love picture will certainly want to see this. Go as far as you like in your promises. It's the sort of thing that gets under the skin and they can't help but like it even though it brings a lump in the throat and moisture to the eyes. Promise them another rare treat in the performance of Miss Gordon. If they don't remember her name, but they should, recall her part in "Humoresque." If you didn't happen to show it you may have to work harder to get them interested, but the results should be compensation enough.

Any effort or expense which may be incurred in exploiting "The Greatest Love," should be well re-paid by the box office results. It's that kind of a picture and one that should be used for an extended run. Catchlines and lobby display should attract. Say: "What is the The Greatest Love?" Perhaps you've never appreciated it but you will after you see Vera Gordon's latest picture. Don't miss it at the blank theater." Use the producer's name because it's probably the best thing they've ever turned out.

Dear Mr. Johnston:

Again it is our pleasure to commend to the exhibitors and the general public an Associated Producers' production -- "The Last of the Mohicans", which exceeded in box office receipts any picture previously shown in the Gifts Theatre.

It is indeed gratifying to have an Associated Producers' production, ("The Forbidden Thing"), break all previous records, both for attendance and receipts last week and then to have you exceed your own record. This new record made under unfavorable weather conditions, is in our judgment, making exhibition history.

This clearly demonstrates to us a theory which we have always held -- that good pictures mean good times and poor pictures the reverse.

May we not extend through you to the Associated Producers in general and Mr. Maurice Tourneur in particular our hearty congratulations upon this, your greatest achievement?

Very truly yours

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .......... 6,550 feet
Those who have seen Lionel Barrymore's previous productions made by Whitman Bennett are going to receive a shock when they witness "The Great Ad-vventure," unless they previously know something about the story and are prepared to see Barrymore in a comedy role. It may be difficult for some to imagine Barrymore going through such antics as sitting on a pallet of wet paint, dragging a couple of overgrown boys by the neck of the coat and a few other short reel comedy tricks.

There are moments in which Barrymore does some acting, characteristic of him, but for the most part his work isn't apt to cause any special noteworthy comment. His forte is not contained in a role such as that provided by Bennett's character.

Priam Farll, England's noted artist, goes to Warsaw, with his valet, to escape Lady Sophia, who is bound to annex herself to Farll. But Sophia follows him to Warsaw and for reason of not knowing what else to do, the artist becomes engaged to her. Next day he escapes, however, and returns to England where his valet dies. Farll gives the dead man's name as "Priam Farll" assuming the valet's name—Leek—as his own. He attends his own funeral in Westminister where again he encounters Lady Sophia in deep mourning weeping bitterly. He escapes before she sees him.

Among the valet's letters is one from a woman with whom he was to have kept an appointment. Farll keeps his late valet's date and the woman turns out to be a widow who had answered Leek's matrimonial ad. Farll marries the widow under the name of Leek.
Lack of funds compels Farll to resume his painting and his work is recognized but he refuses to admit his identity. But when it develops that the late Leek had a wife and two children who arrive to demand their rights, Farll begins to weaken and eventually he proves he is Priam Farll under condition that officially he remain dead as a protection against Lady Sophie's breach of promise suit.

No Trouble to Get Them In But Will They Like It?

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

It may be that some people will like Lionel Barrymore in this comedy role but it is so far removed from anything he would be expected to do that it may be a disappointment to others. As far as the comedy itself is concerned, it is good only in spots. The production end of it will satisfy them but that isn't sufficient.

Tell them "The Great Adventure" was taken from Arnold Bennett's novel "Buried Alive" and dramatized by him and produced under the present title. The situation in which the famous artist attends his own funeral will attract them and generally speaking you should have very little trouble getting them in, and if you don't mind handing them a bit of a disappointment you can use various other stunts to attract.
Play up the star's name extensively and in your an-ouncements use the line: "He refused to marry so he died and attended his own funeral. How did he do it? That's 'The Great Adventure.' See for yourself in Lionel Barrymore's latest picture playing at the blank theater."
"Hold Your Horses!"
What They Think of Tom Moore's Best Comedy

"Pardon us while we pause to interpolate the information that ‘Hold Your Horses’ is ‘some’ picture. It’s so utterly different—so very much and very excellently Tom Moore’s." Daily News.

"Hold Your Horses' is riotously funny as shown on the screen. In the footage there are scores of lively incidents, some hilariously funny subtitles and plenty of action."
Evening Journal.

Tom Moore

"Tom Moore is immensely funny, first as a swagger Irish ‘White Wing,’ later as the ward politician and lastly as the city boss who marries the wealthy woman whose buggy once ran him down when he was on duty."
Evening Telegram.

"However, we can say without any hesitancy that it is the best picture we ever saw Tom Moore do and one of the best pictures we ever saw anyone do. The titles are so well done that you feel like applauding them or patting their author on the back."
N. Y. Tribune.

CHARACTER OF STORY..... Overseer of Hawaiian plantation kills master and then tries to get control by marrying owner’s daughter

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... 5,800 feet

"Passion Fruit" makes a satisfactory picture mostly because of a fine Hawaiian atmosphere and then, too, it is quite a good selection for the personality and talents of the dancer, Doraldina. It has been arranged so that she is given the opportunity to perform two of her characteristic dances. They register on the screen better than might be expected.

Those who enjoyed that portrayal of vallains, Stuart Holmes, and remember the cruel way he tricked Theda Bara in so many of her Fox productions, will see his wily maneuvers all over again in "Passion Fruit." He has probably the “most wickedest” villain role since his appearance in the Theda Bara pictures. And if you liked him then you’ll like him in this.

The story is a bit far-fetched but provides a few good dramatic bits with the climax, building up a fair amount of excitement. The director has maintained some suspense through the medium of an old native called “The Ancient,” who has a secret which he refuses to divulge until he is about to die. Doraldina, as Regina Dominant, daughter of the plantation owner, is not called upon for any unusual dramatic acting but she does well enough in what she has to do and has been photographed to very good advantage. Edward Earle is good in a not very satisfying role.

Anders Rance, overseer of the Dominant plantation, brings about the master’s death and thinks to get control of the island by marrying the daughter, Regina. But the girl hates the slave-driver. Sometime previous Regina had danced for charity and at the close of her dance had been attacked by Pierce Lamont who thought she was his wife who had deserted him. After the death of her father he comes to apologize. Regina asks him to stay and help her manage the business affairs of her late father.

Rance is forced to confine his supervision to the slaves. Jealous of Lamont and desiring to get rid of Regina, Rance forces “The Ancient,” an old diseased native, to swear that the Gods command that the white girl cease to govern them. The natives love Regina but fearing the wrath of the Gods if they disobey, they order Regina out of her home, take Lamont a prisoner, and install Rance as their ruler.

A party is given by Rance to celebrate his rise to power. He sends for Regina and forces her to dance for him. In the meantime “The Ancient” feels death coming on and he confesses that he lied because Rance threatened to tell that he was a leper and not wanting to be sent to the leper colony he had lied. Rance is killed in the scuffle that follows and Regina and Lamont are happy together.

Would Be Well to See It and then Judge According to Your Clientele

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Perhaps a more gentle, sensitive audience will not be thoroughly pleased with "Passion Fruit" inasmuch as it does not appeal to the finer senses. Its hula dances, murders, and some sex appeal through the attacks of the villain on the plantation owner’s daughter will be liable to gain little favor with such an audience. But on the other hand, if they’re willing to overlook these points and accept it as an offering with a splendid Hawaiian atmosphere and approve of the villain type of story, with the girl and her lover finding happiness after the villain’s death, then they’ll be well satisfied with "Passion Fruit."

The title will attract a certain crowd, but most folks won’t know just how it connects with the picture after they see it. Catchlines and good prominence given the name of the dancer-star should get them in.
"Best Straight Melodrama in many a day"

M.P. NEWS

"JANUARY 6th is rather early," says MOTION PICTURE NEWS, "to make predictions for twelve months, but if 'OUTSIDE THE LAW' doesn't prove to be the best straight melodrama of the year then 1921 will see the release of more great pictures than any preceding period of equal length.

"Beginning with some carefully planned scenes that succeed in giving the production atmosphere and establishing sympathy for the leading characters, especially Miss Dean and Wheeler Oakman, the picture builds from sequence to sequence with perfect suspense, good incident and excellent action until its thrilling and dramatic climax, in which Lon Chaney, Mr. Oakman and a dozen others, including Miss Dean, mix it in a way that carries the spectator off his feet and makes him forget that he is looking at a picture.

"If they like action and real drama and thrills, they will like this. It is there from every angle."

CHARACTER OF STORY......Two suspicious young wives plan to catch chicken-chasing husbands but the joke is on them
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION...... About 5,000 feet

Eileen Percy's latest Fox picture doesn't provide her with any more stellar prominence than it gives to some others in the cast. There are four people concerned in the mix-up which forms the story and they are all equally matched with parts so Miss Percy is star, in title only.

The story is made up of situations that are all along the lines of those seen in farce comedies before—the suspicious wife who plans to catch her husband with the goods, but in the end the joke is on her. Only in this they give you a triple dose of it. There are three married men still susceptible to dates with telephone operators and three suspicious wives.

The situations are well enough developed but the director has put in altogether too much chase stuff, in and out of rooms and doors, and other slap-stick tricks that don't belong and don't provide any comedy. The wild masque ball that the husbands attend has been done up in great shape. It's real looking and the extras have entered into the spirit of the thing and have made it look like just what it was intended for.

The photography throughout the picture is poor, the lightings are not clear and the focus is not always right. Eileen Percy and Jane Miller play the parts of the wives, while Harry Meyers and Hayward Mack are the respective husbands. Harry Dunkinson does well with a small comedy part.

Meyers as Eileen's husband is to occupied with business to suit his young wife. Even on their anniversary he is called, away on "business" the last minute. Eileen's sister, Jane Miller, is having trouble with her husband, Hayward Mack, who also finds it convenient to have a "business" engagement on the same night. A note discloses that the "boys" are going to the masque ball. The wives secure the cooperation of the telephone girl in the apartment house and plan to catch their husbands with the goods.

The telephone girl makes a date with one of the husbands and says she will be dressed in a yama yama costume. At the ball three yama yama girls appear, one the telephone girl and the two others, the wives.
A general confusion takes place after this in which the wives get men other than their husbands and when the place is raided they are among those taken by the police while the husbands who are really there, escape. Then it looks as though the girls were there alone and they are forced to ask their husbands' forgiveness and promise they will never be suspicious again.

Will Do for Transient House or on Double Feature Day
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

They had better secure good stories for Eileen Percy if they wish to keep her as a star and justify calling her one. In her last two pictures she has certainly not done anything to give her stellar prominence and the stories themselves don't give her roles that give her a chance to show what she might do. "Why Trust Your Husband" isn't any improvement over her last
"The Land of Jazz."

This is another picture that had best be used on a double feature day for it isn't strong enough to get over as a single attraction. You're bound to hear complaints if you try it alone, unless you cater to a transient crowd and don't have to worry about keeping them coming.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .......... 5,800 feet

All of the productions so far released by the Stoll Film Co., are first rate program pictures particularly in view of the fact that they can be secured at prices comparatively low. But there is one fault which seems to have applied to one or two of the five so far shown and that is they are too long. This is particularly the case with "The Tavern Knight." The ending is obvious to the audience in nearly the middle of the fifth reel but it isn't until they have run off about another reel and a half that the conclusion is reached.

This is no serious fault but it is apt to try the patience of the spectator, since he knows what is going to happen. However, it isn't likely that very much more could be cut, as it is quite apparent that most of these pictures have already seen the hand of the cutter in preparation for the American market.

"The Tavern Knight" again raises the question regarding costume plays. Are they or are they not what the public wants? Those who like historical atmosphere will get a certain amount of it in this.

Eille Norwood handles the title role very well, while Madge Stuart, the only woman member of the cast, is the heroine. Laurence Anderson as a pious youth is obviously "acting" most of the time. He registers any and all emotions by a motion of his jaw or lifting and lowering his eyebrows.

"The Tavern Knight," noted for his handling of the sword, was really Roland Marleigh, lord of Marleigh Castle. Gregory Ashburn and his brother Joseph, had long ago caused the death of the Knight's wife and had taken his young son, now known as their ward Kenneth. Cynthia, a niece, was also a member of the Ashburn household. The forces of Charles Stuart and Oliver Cromwell were about to fight. The Tavern Knight was leading the Stuart forces. It happened that Kenneth, also fighting for the king, was under the Knight's leadership. When Stuart's forces retreated the Knight and Kenneth were captured but later escaped.

The Knight had learned that Kenneth was of the house of Marleigh, now in the possession of the Ashburns. Kenneth took the Knight to Marleigh Castle, where after a time the Knight made known his identity and a sword fight followed. One of the Ashburns escaped with his life when he promised to tell the Knight news of his son. Complications followed in which Ashburn kills Kenneth and leaves the Knight free to acknowledge his love for Cynthia who also loves him, although the Knight had thought she was in love with his son Kenneth.

It's a Question Whether or Not They Want English Costume Plays

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Unless you think they won't like this English costume play you will most likely give satisfaction from a production standpoint with "The Tavern Knight." It has been well made and the story should be easy to follow. There are one or two flash-backs in which the characters tell of something which had happened previously, but the director has put them in so that it shouldn't cause any great confusion. If you think well of it you can promise a historical atmosphere.

On the other hand, if this fact isn't likely to appeal you needn't feel obliged to mention it although they may want to know what they're going to see. There isn't any one feature which deserves promises, so you had better confine your announcements to straight stuff or catchlines such as: "He was called 'The Tavern Knight,' but he was lord of Marleigh Castle. See why he hid his identity until..."

Sort of Fairy Tale Picture That Will Please Younger Audiences

Gladys Walton in
"RICH GIRL, POOR GIRL"
Universal

DIRECTOR ...................... Harry B. Harris
AUTHOR ........................ J. G. Hawks
SCENARIO BY ................... A. P. Younger
CAMERAMAN .................... Earl Ellis

AS A WHOLE........... Of the fairy tale variety; too improbable for grown-ups but should delight children STORY........... Never intended for serious consideration; will satisfy those with abnormal imagination.

DIRECTION....... Reality of settings noticeable; has handled “doubles” well

PHOTOGRAPHY ................. All right
LIGHTINGS ................. Correct
CAMERA WORK ............... Up to standard
STAR.............. Rich girl and poor girl both; better as rich girl

SUPPORT ..................... Adequate
EXTERIORS ..................... Good
INTERIORS ..................... Proper atmosphere
DETAIL ................. All right
CHARACTER OF STORY........ Rich girl changes places with poor girl but is glad to be the rich girl in the end

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ........... 4,675 feet

Unless the majority of the audience is comprised of folks with abnormal imaginations or else they are willing to take an awful lot for granted, they probably won’t be entertained by “Rich Girl, Poor Girl.” Gladys Walton’s latest for Universal is essentially a juvenile picture and as such should delight matinee audiences.

It’s the poor little rich girl formula with a few added flourishes. The star plays the dual role of rich girl and poor girl, but other than costumes she doesn’t distinguish between them. Of course the title writer helps her out by a lot of slang which she is supposed to utter as the poor girl. The director, on the other hand, has managed the “doubling” business especially well. Instead of double exposures it would seem that most of the time he has had another actress “doubling” for Miss Walton. The whole thing has been very well managed.

Also the director has seen to it that the proper atmosphere of the tenement district is reflected in the settings. The interiors are all very real looking, also the street scenes with the dirty urchins and the hand organ artist. Among those in the cast are Gordon McGregor, Harold Austin, Antrim Short, Joe Neary, Wadsworth Harris and C. W. Herzinger.

Nora McShane lived with her father, a non-abstainer, in Fish Alley. Nora sold papers and was forced to give “the old man” the money for his beer and go for it besides. Mugsy was Nora’s pal and sweetheart. One day while on the way for her father’s beer Nora was passing the Vanderfleet mansion. The gate happened to be open, so Nora wandered in to admire the flowers.

The gardner came out and proceeded to beat away the intruder when suddenly the poor little rich girl, Beatrice Vanderfleet, appeared on the scene and invited Nora into the house.

Each expressed a desire to have what the other had. The poor girl wanted to be rich and the rich girl wanted to be poor, so Beatrice agreed to change places for a while. Dressed in Nora’s rags Beatrice went forth to Fish Alley, but her first taste of Alley life was enough to discourage her. Nora’s father, thinking it Nora, beat her for not returning with the beer and then when he found out who she really was, Beatrice was held for ransom.

In the meantime Nora was going through the ordeal of trying to play Beatrice. Reginald, a ward of Beatrice’s grandfather, realized that Nora wasn’t Beatrice, but he decided to play the “game” whatever it was. Eventually the truth came out and after Beatrice was recovered, Nora was given a place in the Vanderfleet home.

Will Make Excellent Matinee Entertainment

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

If the grownups will accept this in the light of a fairy tale and be satisfied with it as such, you are all right. But on the other hand if you think them likely to look at it only as an improbability and refuse to use their imagination, then it won’t go for your adult crowd. But the kiddies should glory in it. They’ll love the way the poor girl rejoices when she gets into the rich girl’s clothes, when she is told she can take a bath in the beautiful tub even though it isn’t Saturday night and when she sits down to the table and tries to manipulate things the way the others do.

Stills of the star in the both characters will attract and for catchlines use: “From Fish Alley to the Vanderfleet mansion. Some jump—but Nora McShane did it.” Or, “The rich girl wanted to be poor and the poor girl wanted to be rich so they changed places. See Gladys Walton’s latest pictures for the result.”

CHARACTER OF STORY...... Girl in search of adventure finds it in Central America

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ........ 4,756 feet

Constance Binney's latest picture for Realart is taken from Alice Duer Miller's novel, "Calderon's Prisoner," but they have given it a new name, one which can't be applied literally to the picture for "Something Different" isn't very different. It contains a pleasing romance, has been provided with very pretty settings—the locations look Cuban—and the star's personality will appeal. She hasn't much to do but look cute and play around like a spoiled kitten—but she does that well.

There's some revolutionary business, spies, government overthrowing and the like which is secondary to the romance. And while it isn't made very clear what it's all about, that doesn't matter because it isn't interesting anyway. And there isn't enough of it to worry about. Ward Crane is a good looking leading man and makes an attractive screen lover. Crane Wilbur, an old time picture favorite is also in the cast but has a very small part. Lucy Fox has a meagre role.

The director has done well enough with material that afforded limited possibilities for a picture play. There is practically nothing to it but the romance between the star and Ward Crane as Don Mariano, the head of Santiago's army, but this much is satisfying. The director has done well to subordinate the other business even though he found it necessary to do a lot of padding with the love story part of it.

Alicia Lee, an heiress reaching the end of her funds, was being forced into a marriage for money, so she decided to seek adventure in Central America whither she went to visit a friend. She later learned that Don Luis, husband of her friend, was hostile to the government and secretly planning to overthrow it. At the government ball Alicia met Don Mariano, head of the army. During the ball Alicia saw Mariano kill a spy and hated him for his cruelty.

Later Alicia was taken prisoner by Mariano under suspicion that she was aiding Don Luis in his revolt. Alicia was made very comfortable in Mariano's home and while she wouldn't admit it she was falling in love with her captor. Mariano was also in love with his captive, so much that he finally managed her release and promised to release her friend's husband who had also been taken a prisoner and would probably have been put to death.

Alicia returned to her home, but she was soon followed by Mariano, who had been exiled from his country for allowing the prisoners to escape. He told Alicia of his love, and of course they lived happy ever after.

Use Star's Name and Tell the Women They'll Like It.

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This is essentially a woman's picture. They will be pleased with the romance and will be "just crazy" about the good looking hero, who comes all the way from Central America to claim his bride. There isn't much in it for a man. If you don't care so much about the male members of your audience you can play it up for the women with attractive catchlines used in connection with the title. Say "She didn't want to marry merely for money so she went to Central America in search of 'Something Different.' Did she find it? Well, see Constance Binney in her latest Realart production, for the answer."

Use the star's name extensively and recall her "39 East" and "Erstwhile Susan." Confine any promises to the romance part of it and tell them they'll get a glimpse of some pretty Cuban country which forms the background for some of the action.

DETAIL...... A number of errors of grammar and spelling in titles

CHARACTER OF STORY...... Wandering cowboy protects girl ranch owner from cattle rustlers

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ....... 4,500 feet

"The Duke of Chimney Butte" will probably draw well—entirely on the strength of Fred Stone's name, which is known to nearly every American theater goer. But even to Stone fans this picture will hardly prove satisfactory entertainment. The story, a Western, with Stone playing a cowboy, is lacking in interest, and more especially in action. There are many instances where padding and stalling to fill space are apparent, due to the fact that there isn't enough material to cover the full distance. Then, too, Fred Stone's great reputation has been built on his splendid comedy and stunts on the stage, and in this he hasn't been given any chance to be funny, and the one stunt he does do is to ride a bucking broncho in a professional manner.

Because he has no opportunity to show his versatility, his performance is going to disappoint a lot of people who will be looking for some of his stage fun. He plays the cowboy part in a highly satisfactory way, but there's nothing much for him to do.

Director Borzage has done as well as was possible with what he had to work with, and a fair element of suspense is developed from the third reel on. Splendid western locations and some good night shots of cowpunchers in camp are notable features.

Jerry Lambert (Fred Stone) is a bicycling peddler, selling patent knives. One night he rides into a cowboy camp just at supper time, and gives them a lengthy and humorous spiel about his wares, in hopes of getting a meal. He abandons peddling and joins the cowboys. One day after racing the express train, he sees on the rear platform a beautiful girl, and instantly falls in love. He starts out to find her, accompanied by "Tater Legs." The rest of it is all about what happens in his efforts to win her—which he does.

There is scarcely any better known name in the theatrical world than that of Fred Stone. There is scarcely anyone who has not heard of him, and few who haven’t seen him at some time or other from the days of the “Wizard of Oz” to his present “Tip-Top.” His name therefore, is by all odds your biggest, and in this case about your only selling point.

It ought to be easy to get them in by the use of his name alone, but as the picture won’t give them what they will expect of Stone, it will be well to keep rather quiet about the story, and the nature of his part. Talk about the star and his famous parts on the stage. Recall the stage successes that made him famous, such as “The Wizard of Oz,” “The Red Mill,” and more recently, “Chin-Chin” and “Jack O’Lantern.”

CHARACTER OF STORY......Wholesale murderer finally brought to justice by "tenderfoot," who rescues the heroine from his clutches

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ............. 5,850 feet

There is sufficient of the elements of suspense and excitement in the screen version of Stewart Edward White's "The Killer," to put it over if your audiences enjoy plenty of shooting and death plots of various kinds. It is a good picture of the Western type, and as such should make a satisfactory program offering.

Director Hickman, after a somewhat slow start, got things speeded up, and after the first reel the action moves along rapidly and develops in a manner that holds the interest right up to the climax. The fault that will be found by some, is that the picture contains too many killings, but as these are more or less expected in this type of picture, they will be accepted by audiences who enjoy Westerns.

The most important member of the cast is Frank Campeau, and he does "The Killer" with his usual expert villainy. Claire Adams, in the feminine lead, looks pretty and is adequate in the part. The rest of the cast are all just average. Prominent among these is Tod Sloan, famous jockey, who gives a creditable performance for a more or less amateur actor.

Henry Hooper, a rancher on the Arizona-Mexican border, persuades his partner, John Emory, to visit the ranch and to bring with him his daughter, Ruth, and his little son. Hooper hires an ex-jockey, to rob Emory's safe of their partnership papers.

Emory is killed shortly after his arrival, leaving Ruth and Bobby in Hooper's power. Brower arrives with the stolen papers. Hooper adds his name to the list of those to be killed. Hooper proposes marriage to Ruth, but she prefers death.

Sanborn on a neighboring ranch, becomes curious over the rumors about "The Killer," and pays him a visit. He discovers the true situation, but Hooper tells him that interference will mean the death of all of them. Sanborn later is captured by Hooper and is liberated by an old groom. He rushes to the aid of Ruth, and in the end they are happy.

Talk About the Excitement, and Use the Players' Names

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

In the first place you can use the author's name and the title to good advantage. Mr. Whit'e's mystery and adventure stories have been widely read and enjoy a great popularity. "The Killer" is one of the best known of his novels so that the title will be an attraction to large numbers of people.

Talk about the thrills and excitement that fill the picture, and play up the terrible character of the man known as "The Killer." Frank Campeau is the best known member of the cast, and his name can be used to advantage, as can Claire Adams', in a lesser degree. Make mention of the fact that one of the important parts is played by Tod Sloan, probably the most famous jockey in the world.

"PAYING THE PIPER"
Fitzmaurice Prod.—Paramount

DIRECTOR ......................... George Fitzmaurice
AUTHOR ............................ Ouida Bergere
SCENARIO BY ...................... Ouida Bergere
CAMERAMAN ....................... Arthur Miller

AS A WHOLE ..... Rich in settings and done with much flourish but has no human touches or heart interest

STORY ...... Hangs by a very weak thread and is completely overshadowed by "showy" sets and things that appeal to the eye

DIRECTION ...... Typically Fitzmaurice; all his attention is given to pleasing the eye

LIGHTINGS ......................... Clear
CAMERA WORK ..................... First rate

PLAYERS ...... Dorothy Dickson really the star but not credited as such; Alma Tell, Reginald Denney, Rod LaRoque and George Fawcette most important in support

EXTERIORS ......................... Pretty
INTERIORS ......................... Elaborate
DETAIL .................. Several noticeable errors
CHARACTER OF STORY .................. Fully implied by the title

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .......... 5,332 feet

"Paying the Piper," a George Fitzmaurice production which really stars Dorothy Dickson, the dancer, but does not give her stellar credit, is like other Fitzmaurice productions in that it's appeal is to the eye. It is rich in setting, has colorful backgrounds and consists of materials generally that are mean to satisfy the optics but that's all that can be said for "Paying the Piper."

Ouida Bergere's story is weak. It tells the story of the poor little rich girl and the poor little rich boy, with the necessary complications, and then there are one or two bits intended as heart interest but they aren't even skin deep. Frivolity prevails and when a youngster is run through by the rich girl's auto and the mother weeps bitterly because the child will die, you aren't even in a mood to feel sorry.

The picture is thoroughly pleasing to look at but it's such shallow entertainment that you forget it when you're outside the theater. And Dorothy Dickson is really the star. Her appearance is an attraction but most people will be disappointed that she isn't given an opportunity to dance. They'll probably be expecting it. There are some errors in detail that are going to be noticed. The introduction is a sort of prologue showing the rich girl and the rich boy as children. George Fawcett is the boy's father and after some twenty years, his appearance hasn't changed the slightest. Another—they refer to the time as morning but immediately following someone goes to bed for the night.

Barbara Wyndham and Larry Grahame, both children of the rich, are engaged as a matter of business. Their parent's need each other's help and so they join families through the children. There are two others—Marcia Marillo, once a poor girl, now well known in a fashionable cabaret, and Keith Larne, a successful landscape gardener. Keith is in love with Marcia but tries to reform Barbara, the butterfly.

Larry is engaged to Barbara but loves Marcia. Larry eventually tells Marcia he has to marry Barbara, but that they will go on just the same, but Marcia refuses the arrangement. Then Marcia and Keith decide they are better suited for each other and they marry and live happy, etc. But Barbara and Larry receive a sad shock. Their respective parents suddenly lose all their money. Larry makes the best of it but Barbara seeks her customary pleasure otherwise and comes nearly getting mixed up in a nasty shooting affair. This teaches her her lesson, and she goes back to Larry content to live in their small apartment and share the hard knocks with him.

Two years later both couples are getting along famously with a young Larry making Barbara and Larry happy.

They Will Probably Like to Look at It But Don't Promise a Story

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

With some audiences it won't matter much that "Paying the Piper" consists of nothing but pretty sets, two pretty girls and two pleasing leading men and a series of scenes that please the eye. It offers adequate passing satisfaction and while you're looking at it you're apt to be well enough repaid for your admission price, but that's as far as "Paying the Piper" will go.

Dorothy Dickson is good to look at but those who have seen her dance or have heard about her will be disappointed that she doesn't dance in the picture. She screens very well. Although she isn't starred, her name will probably attract attention. Refer to the picture as a Fitzmaurice production. Those who saw his "Idols of Clay" and liked it, will want to see this.
Some Short Reels

Pathé Review No. 89

This number starts off with a Hy Mayer Travelough entitled "In The Land of Fancy." Some tinted views of an airplane flight, and scenes in the park,—the latter a clever combination of pen and ink drawings and photography, make up this part. The next subject is an interesting bit. It shows Benita, the artist, making her famous masks, which created a lot of talk in the New York theatrical world, and the colored shots are some of the finest work in the New York cub market. To anyone who has never seen the method of trading on the curb, these will be interesting. They show in slow motion, the sign language employed in completing deals from the street to the broker's window. The reel concludes with a series of tinted views of a bamboo raft floating down a picturesque stream in Japan. Some very pretty Japanese scenery is included in the latter. It's a reel of average interest.

"Pinning It On"—Pathé

Type of production........................................1 reel comedy

Eddie Boland and the Vanity Fair Girls are seen in this, and aside from a more or less attractive display of femininity in scanty attire, there isn't anything to recommend it. The comedy isn't there at all. The situation which is supposed to provide the fun is when the girls attend an artist's reception given in the latest creation of a famous designer. The designer hasn't had time to make the dresses, so he merely pins a lot of material in drapes and folds around the young ladies. The pins keep coming out and the girls lose their dresses at embarrassing moments. This stuff doesn't register more than a faint amount of amusement at any rate. The girls look fairly well, and it is slightly amusing to see Boland pinning their clothes on with remarkable speed. Boland does as well as anyone could with the material, but has no chance to be funny.

"Milk and Yeaggs"—Universal

Type of production........................................1 reel comedy

Some fairly good stuff in this one. Most of it is furnished by a tiny kid who seems absolutely unconscious of the camera and does several unexpected things in a matter of fact way. There are no featured comedians, nor is any one particularly funny, but several bits are good for laughs. The wealthy family, the maid, the chauffeur, and a few detectives all get mixed up as to who's who in a search for a burglar, after the maid sees a flash light moving about the house. Everybody is on the hunt and the burglars are nearly all shut up in the same closet. Then when they get together and find that the burglar isn't among them, the chase starts all over. The burglar turns out to be the kid, who is discovered raiding the ice box for a "night cap" of milk. About half of it is amusing. A fair number.

"Memories of Old Malaca"—Burton Holmes-Paramount

Type of production........................................1 reel travelogue

This reel takes your audience on a trip to the island of Malaca, in the South Seas, near Borneo. It's a strange and little known country to the average American, and the views of this ancient capital, the City of Malaca, with a combination of Eastern and Western civilization, form a subject of better than average entertainment. First come some shots of various points on the coast. Then come views of motley crowds of inhabitants representing many different races. Following this are views of the country in which some beautiful pictures have been made of lakes, rivers, and the tropical vegetation of the island. The next scenes are unique. They show the barge up, the close-up of a scientist extracting the poison from the mouth of a Cobra, a deadly snake which inhabits the island. There are some more scenes of natural beauty, street scenes, and the real end of several shots of a bunch of native kids playing one of their favorite games. Most of it is fairly entertaining, and some of it is very interesting. It is a good number.

"Beautiful Bermuda—Burton Holmes-Paramount

Type of production........................................1 reel travelogue

Views of average interest comprise the greater part of this reel, with some especially clear and interesting airplane views of a great part of the Island of Bermuda. Some views aboard ship for the city of Hamilton, the capital of the island, start it off, and then the boat is seen approaching the city, finally docking in the harbor. Views around the pier on "ship day" follow. Then come shots of several streets and points of interest. Among the latter are the old British Colonial parliament building, a magnificent cathedral, and the Government House, with a bird's eye view of the city from the grounds of the latter. The balance of the reel is made up of airplane shots of the city of Hamilton and a large piece of the island in every direction from the capital. These views are remarkably clear although evidently taken from an altitude, and are the best and most entertaining part of the picture. As a whole it's a fair travel reel.

"Edgar Camps Out"—Goldwyn

Type of production........................................2 reel comedy

This number of Booth Tarkington's Edgar series maintains the same high comedy standard which has characterized the preceding offerings. Johnny Jones is still "Edgar," ably assisted by Buddy Messenger, and a number of other able juvenile performers. These pictures have an entirely different appeal from the majority of the real comedies. If you have played them already it is sufficient to say that this one is fully up to standard. If you have not used any of the series they are well worth looking at, particularly if you cater to a high class of patronage. In this one Edgar is in a fair way to lose the lady of his heart because the Bates boys have been given a complete camping outfit for their back yard, tent, stove and everything. However, Edgar soon rallies and organizes a side show, displaying the greatest freaks on earth. This soon draws attention from the Bates boys, and Edgar is himself again, until that night when he camps out in the sideshow tent. Then the spooks begin to over and about and Edgar is carried shrieking into the house, by his father.

"Aint Love Grand"—Educational

Type of production........................................1 reel comedy

A Gayet comedy featuring Helen Darley and Billy Blitcher. Miss Darley makes an attractive leading lady, but Blitcher is not very funny. His antics savor of amateurishness, and he hasn't been given much business in this one to work with. The idea of the thing, and the one situation on which the comedy is based, is only a slight variation of a much used theme. Two contending suitors are at swords points over the hand of the lady. One is a little Percy, who's best bet is the ukelele, and the other is a big bluffer. The big fellow plans a mountain climbing party to show the little chap up. When they all get out in the wilds, the big one bribes the guide to kidnap the girl and hold her for ransom until he rescues her. A real bandit catches her and the big fellow too, and both are saved by the supposed sissy, who wins the girl. There aren't more than three laughs in the piece, and none of it is particularly amusing. It's below par.

"Old Faithful"—Prizma

Type of production........................................1 reel colored scenic

The picture takes its title from only one of the several objects of natural beauty and interest in Yellowstone Park, which are shown in Prizma titles. Several gazes besides "Old Faithful" are shown in action. "Cleopatra's Terrace," a peculiar formation of lava, ages old, makes an interesting bit. A very good view of the Canyon, The Eagle's Nest, and one or two other points of interest make up the first part of the reel, and then "Old Faithful" is shown in a series of shots, which bring out the coloring in good shape. It's all very done, and should win approval anywhere on the natural beauty of the scenes photographed, and the Prizma coloring.
Short Reels

Kineto Review—"Vegetarians"—Kineto Co.

Type of production........................................1 reel pictorial

This entire reel is made up of a series of short shots showing a large number of non-meat eating animals. Several unfamiliar species are well photographed, and these constitute the only portion of any particular interest. First is shown a huge drove of jack-rabbits. Then, an elephant, and then some very good close-ups of the Flying-fox or fruit bat. These views, though the peculiar construction of this queer animal, and its destructive habits are visited. First is shown a huge drove of jack-rabbits. Then, an elephant, and then some very good close-ups of the Flying-fox or fruit bat. These views, though the peculiar construction of this queer animal, and its destructive habits are visited.

"Won, One Flivver"—Universal

Type of production........................................1 reel comedy

There is a comedy idea as a basis for this one, but Chuck Reiner, who wrote and directed it, left it half finished. The result is that there is a promise of a lot of good stuff. The boy gets off the bat, which doesn't develop to any great extent. The idea is that a young man who goes broke in a poker game, suddenly gets word that he has won the "flivver" prize at a chicken raffle. The fly arrives with a parcel post—no tricks. There was a chance for some good business in his attempts to assemble the car, but they have passed it up, and show the heavy handed manner in which the house is bungled. The young man calls his sweetheart who comes all prepared for a ride, and then he can't get the car out of the house. Meanwhile another fellow has stolen the winning ticket and claimed the car. When the landlord arrives, the butler and the girl take the car apart and sneak it out. This could also have been made much funnier. It ends up by the flivver exploding before anybody gets a ride. There are one or two good laughs but more will be expected. It is a fair reel.

"Simple And Sweet"—Universal

Type of production........................................1 reel comedy

Aside from a great big laugh at the finish, this one hasn't much to recommend it. In fact it seems as though the whole thing has been made for the one sub-title at the end. A fond mother is troubled because she has raised her son like a girl, until the age of twenty or thereabouts, he cares for nothing but knitting. She then hires a young lady to impersonate the daughter of an old friend, and try and interest sonny, who, however, refuses to be interested. At the same time she engages a fighter to train him up in knits that don't want that either. When the fighter takes him down a rough street, son suddenly cuts loose and beats everybody up. He then rushes home in a frenzy, and when mother asks him the trouble he says that the hornet man told him there wasn't any Santa Claus. It's an old one, but it's put over in a funny way and is a big laugh. The rest of the stuff is practically devoid of amusement.

"Sweet Revenge"—Universal

Type of production........................................2 reel Western

Ed (Hoot) Gibson is featured in this one, which is a fairly interesting number. Gibson has a very pleasing personality, and his work is enjoyable all the way through. The principal fault is that the story is so much of the standard type that the coming action is always obvious. The story revolves about the ever existing feud between the cattle men and the sheep men of the west. Hoot is the only cattlemen in the neighborhood and refuses to be run off by the wealthiest sheep man in the district. Hoot is in love with the sheep man's daughter, and refuses to be run off. The little son of the sheep man is so runts away and wanders to Hoot's shanty, where Hoot keeps him, sending a note to the father to come after him. A villainous foreman intercepts the note and plans to kidnap the little lad. After a tragic climax, Hoot captures and marries the "illegitimate" daughter, winning the girl and the good will of her father. It runs smoothly and fast, but is only moderately interesting.

"Will O' The Wisp"—Bruce-Educational

Type of production........................................1 reel scenic

This reel is described at the outset as the story of a motion picture expedition that failed to get any pictures, but in spite of this statement there have been obtained some fine shots of mountain scenery. The "southe" is seen departing for the mountains via pack train, and their course up the steep slopes is followed by the camera, until at last they arrive at what they consider a suitable spot for gathering scenic material. Although they are shown going away empty-handed. There is a type of luna- tion for a long stay, the weather takes an unfavorable turn, and the cameraman is seen making fruitless efforts to shoot the surrounding mountain peaks. They break camp a little later, abandoning hope of having any sunshine, and then the spectator follows them on the downward trail. This part brings out some very pretty shots, but there is a great sameness of all to it which becomes monotonous. The reel concludes with a colored shot of the campers seated about a roaring camp fire, and preparing the evening meal. A moderately satisfactory number.

"Leaping Lions And Jailbirds"—Universal

Type of production........................................2 reel comedy

This is a Century comedy featuring a mob of trained lions, and developing some highly amusing business. The chase with the lions pursuing everybody in the exact is prolonged a little more than is necessary, but it is really funny for a time. The main feature of the "story" is a burlesque of a hanging, which doesn't sound particularly funny, but is done in a nonsensical slapstick manner that is bound to get a few laughs. It's curious after they have had such good things to do the jail up to the finish, when the convicted is saved from hanging by the warden's daughter. The whole thing is set in the jail with some fair comedy at the start when the warden pulls a lot of foolish physical exercise with the prisoners, who leave their cells, go through their paces, and return, with amazing speed. The prisoner in cell 13 is condemned to hang, when his charming wife appears to plead with the warden. However he is firm. Meanwhile the warden's wife aids the prisoner to escape, but he hides in a barrel which rolls off the wagon and back to the jail. Then friend wife lets loose the000, who proceeds to make the jail unhealthy for everybody. There's some good trick photography in this part. On the whole it is an average number.

"Kickaroos"—Universal

Type of production........................................2 reel western

This one features Ed (Hoot) Gibson, and while it is classified as a western, it is comedy from start to finish, and very funny comedy too. Whether or not you have heretofore used scene features of this kind, this one is well worth considering as it is almost sure fire for any kind of an audience. Gibson shows a good sense of comedy values and the subject, while it is the overworked prohibition stuff, is an entirely new angle of it, and furnishes real amusement from start to finish. Gibson is seen as a young cowpuncher, somewhat addicted to liquor (when he can get it). His sweetheart, the rancher's daughter, tells him that if he ever takes another drink, their engagement is at an end. Hoot's rival overhears this, and the very next day meets him on the road and offers a delicious smelling drink. Hoot falls for it, and arrives at the ranch unconscious. The liquor was doped, but the girl doesn't know it, and she and the boys plan to cure Hoot almost at once. When he comes to he is lying in state on a funeral bier, covered with flowers and wreathes. The folks talk about digging his grave and no one pays any attention to him when he wanders around the house, until Hoot thinks he is dead. Then he goes out and sees his grave with the hearse already prepared. He then watches his own funeral procession. Hoot's rival then appears, thinks he has won, and Hoot, who has lost his mind when he sees what he thinks is the ghost. Scared stiff, he confesses, and then they have a hard time to convince Hoot that he isn't dead. The thing is done in a most amusing way that makes this an especially good two-reeler.
"Mr. Wu" breaks an old tradition!

What happened to you on this date—-a day following a double New Year's celebration and a two day Christmas holiday—-with a week of festivities sandwiched in between?

Attention Mr. Proctor.

Gentlemen:

I am playing your feature, "Mr. Wu", this week at my Strand Theatre, a first run, week stand house in the city of Newark, N. J., and I must admit that when I saw the picture in a cold projection room, I never anticipated it would meet with such splendid results when properly presented before an audience.

We opened to a very large Sunday business, and yesterday, Monday, after New Year's Day and Sunday coming together, we naturally expected a very light Monday, but to our surprise, we opened at eleven o'clock Monday morning, and fifteen minutes later, we were holding people out.

We heard nothing but praise for the picture, and I am really delightfully surprised myself. I can see nothing but unlimited success in the future for your company, if they continue to furnish attractions of this kind.

Yours very sincerely,

Somlo Talks
Philadelphia—Joseph Somlo, one of the directors of the German U. F., attended the opening of the Stanley Theater on Friday night.

Somlo speaks broken English by nature to converse in his native tongue. He stated that he was especially delighted over the reception "Passion," received in America and added that he was not at liberty to tell specifically all of the pieces he had in mind, there was a number of elaborate German actions which he thinks will be received here. He did mention "Boleyn," which he expects the idea will love very much. "Theatre," according to Somlo, is lavish and extravagant in the extreme. At his birth, Samuel Rachman, Ben's associate, called out, "It was waiting and led Somlo to the station and New York.

Comedy Combine?
Talk is in the Air But No One Will Speak for Publication—Had Origin on Coast
Reports have reached New York from the coast regarding some sort of a merger of comedy units, a combination, the report has it, that would mean a monopoly in the short reel field.
The scheme would mean the formation of a nation-wide distributing company to deal exclusively in short reels. The plan, as it has been discussed, would not mean that the units involved would produce in one studio but merely release their product direct, through their own releasing company. It is an open secret that some of the producers of well-known comedy brands are very much dissatisfied with the manner in which their product is being handled by their distributor.

Three distinct companies were approached in New York for some definite information regarding the plan. In each instance it was admitted that negotiations of the plan had come to their ears. Two of these companies are at present releasing the comedies of some of the people who are reported in the merger. The third is a well-known producer who has recently changed his distributor.

The following comedians are mentioned in connection with the merger. All of them, or practically all of them, are at present under contract: Chester Conklin, Charles Conklin, Helen Howell, Alexander Alt, Lloyd Hamilton, Hank Mann, Bill Franey, Milburn Moranti, Clyde Cook, Jack Cooper, Jimmy Aubrey, Jack White and Gale Henry.

About a year or so ago there was some talk about the formation of a company to distribute short reels only. This was before Educational had begun its era of expansion and before it had established its own distributing organization.

Stanley's Tribute

God took home long before his ambition was an achievement. And all. Yes, all, who saw that beautiful place, and who knew Stanley, stood for a moment in silent reverence.

And few. Practically none. Knew that Friday morning Jules went to Stanley's grave. And in silent prayer placed on the sword a wreath.

SOMETHING ABOUT BROTHER JULES

Stanley left his heritage to his brother, Jules E. Regular fellow. Knows how to leave detail to his associates. Knows how to pick men. Great trait of his brother. Knows how to enjoy life. Decides a lot of plans over the links. Misses a two inch putt. But doesn't say it. Ask Aaron Jones. Or Adolph Zukor. But how does he play the next hole? Ambitious. But quiet. Left hand never knows what his right's doing. Could have one of the biggest positions in this business if he would take it. At this moment. But likes things as they are. Best of all: he knows how to enjoy life. One look at him proves it.

A VISIT—MAYBE A MEANING

Ben Ami visited the Griffith studio on Friday. Ever hear of him? No? Maybe not. He's not in pictures. Star of "Samson and Delilah." Real star. Great actor. One of greatest on American stage today. Great pantomimist. Proves it in his work. One of Griffith's men looked him over last week. At work. Maybe that visit to the studio will mean something.

DOIN' THINGS

Don't forget Charley Pettijohn in this. Worked like a beaver. Just like he was in the Statehouse. In Indianapolis. In days gone by. But got things done. A blue ribbon achievement. Worth its weight in gold.

Imports Creep Up

The National City Bank in a statement issued yesterday made an interesting comparison between total exports and total imports of film for the past year. The statement said that the imports were 175,000,000 ft., the exports 106,000,000 ft., which gives the imports 60% of the exports.

Total exports for the year aggregated 47,000 mil. in length, the same as in 1920. The increase of exposure of exposed films has been cut in recent years, the total quantity having grown from 30,000,000 ft. in 1913, 73,000,000 ft. in 1915, 164,000,000 ft. in 1916, 158,000,000 ft. in 1919, and 175,000,000 in 1920. The exports of unexposed films were 114,000,000 ft. in 1914 and 126,000,000 ft. in 1915 to less than 65,000,000 in 1920.

The exports of exposed films to the United States have dropped from 114,000,000 ft. in 1915 to less than 65,000,000 in 1920.

Those Deposits

Virginia Exhibitor Says Some Things Regarding Them—Uses Plain Language Too

Carl A. Jones, vice-president of the Central Amusement Co., Inc., operating the Columbia and Eagle theaters in Richmond, Va., took to the press the other day that Virginia and Tennessee have some plain things to say about deposits.

In writing this to publication, he says: "We were not only to ask for the 'deposit' graft. Did you ever hear of an officer that ever had lived who would go back to the letter, getting his 'deposit' back? You know of such a man, or know a man who knows him. If you didn't, you know him. You take a man, you kindly put us in touch with him, we want to put the graft, a genius, and, if he is within 2,000 miles of us and expose the scheme, the 'backers' and hand and ask him how the 'off' he did it, take them by their lawyers and house in this regard have about $1,000.

The owners of this company have been in various counties not only with fair success. Their net resources are considerably greater than $50,000. With their commercial appeals they can buy on market (they are in more than one business, open account, 30 days, less 2%). We operate two houses, one a shallow front, showing short subjects or comedies, and one showing the features. When we attempt to make this appeal, we find, in cash—little of which comes back.

"Mr. Radunsky of the International Co. has presented an exchange with six theaters that he desires to make on a per subject but in order of buy them at $125,000. With their commercial ads they can buy on market. Finally, we pay a series and ask for our deposit to be returned. We find that in the time it takes to play the pictures that Mr. Radunsky has sold his exchange, and married Mr. Stinnes's daughter, Leona, has been a definite plan, and introduce, and fed by a large audience, and incidentally have taken them to build the sack. If we attempt to make a purchase, poster, and shape the 'managers' associations unite in some mysterious an attempt to make us good boys or close the house. We have had two experiences of this sort. They have never closed yet for we have always found someone who would buy the exchange. Radunsky was if he was willing to pay for it but it is all right. Their business is with us; this appeal was connected with the exhibitors' end result, they have decided to leave California and incidentally have taken some subject, and paid out, and left to build the sack. The company by a special resolution passed at a recent meeting voted to increase its capital from £2,000,000 to £5,000,000. In a trade paper announcement as to policy the company states that £2,080,000 have already been subscribed. Its announcement states, in part:

"The Omnium Trust Corp. was founded in 1918 with an authorized capital of £1,000,000. Its activities were hampered, however, by the conclusion of the war, but now, after months of careful preparation, plans have been completed for the acquisition of a number of prominent kin-emas, including some of the finest properties in the country. Most of the properties as acquired will be reconstructed and brought thoroughly into line with the modern Omnium Model theater-restaurant which the profits of the films have evolved in the erection of the new West End Theatre, Edinburgh.

The Omnium Trust Corp. is also arranging to produce pictures of a large scale, and to this end estates are being acquired in Yorkshire, Wiltshire and Norfolk, respectively, embracing in the aggregate more than 1,250 acres, whereas it is intended that super-productions of the highest quality shall be made—each of them a worthy contribution to the British film industry.

The principles of co-partnership will be applied to all departments of the corporation's business. An issue will shortly be made which will enable the average picturegoer to secure an interest in every term in the various properties to be acquired. Thus, at very small cost, the cinema patron will be able to share in the profits of the exhibitions to which they take part. In a connection this serious quest for new screen talent is being organized, and 25,000 £1 shares will be presented to selected candidates.

The Omnium Trust Corp. was formed in Arizona in 1918 by H. R. Dugg and T. H. Hayes.

Five Bill At Once
Peculiar Situation Exists in Nebraska
— Some Sort of Regulation Certain.
(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Lincoln, Neb.—Five bills have been introduced in the state legislature affecting the industry. Three of them, two of which are duplicates, provide strict censorship. A fourth asks for Congress to pass national censorship, and a fifth for precaution against fires in all places where pictures are shown.

The most imposing bill provides drastic censorship, Sunday closing, and censorship of all advertising. Under its provisions there would be a board of three censors, who would review for $2 a reel all pictures to be shown in the state; review all newspaper advertising, posters and other ads; can hire any employees it deems necessary, paying them what it desires. The bill also provides for Sunday closing.

The second vicious bill is House Roll No. 123, which makes it a misdemeanor to show pictures or any kind of picture, play, show or other entertainment at any time, or even to attempt such showing, of a picture showing the planning, attempting or committing of certain crimes. The crimes, a long list of them, are named. They cover the entire field of human emotions, from the fist to murder.

The resolution seeking national censorship is based purely upon economic grounds, and says nothing about the detailed regulation of pictures.

The bill providing for fire precautions in all places where pictures are shown is likely to receive the support of the industry. If the law is passed, the theater owners will see that schools, churches and other public places where pictures are occasionally shown will be cleaned up and the same precautions taken as are required in a theater.

Settlement Reached
Koplar-F. P. Missouri Corp. Litigation Finally Brought to an End
(Special to WID’S DAILY)

St. Louis—The battles between Harry Koplar and the Famous Players Missouri Corp. for control of 15 local picture theaters is at an end. Koplar had demanded $1,350,000 for the show houses, which were transferred to the Famous Players’ organization last April.

Fred E. Cornell, president of the corporation, stated Koplar and his brothers under the terms of the settlement only got about 25 per cent of the amount they demanded. They will be paid partly in cash and the balance in notes secured by mortgages on the theaters.

According to Cornell the Koplars received $240,000 for their so-called “little theaters” including the Novelty, Gravois, Arco and Lafayette; $80,000 for their interest in such theaters as the Pershing, Kings and Shenandoah and $12,000 for their lease on the Royal theater.

Appeal Dropped
On the motion of counsel for Eastman Kodak, Chief Justice White ordered the issuance of a mandate which requires the company to ‘abrogate the illegal monopoly’ in photographic supplies, which the government alleged it held.

The bill of complaint was filed against the Eastman company on June 9, 1913, and the case itself was heard 11 months later. The decision was handed down on Aug. 24, 1915, and established that 72 per cent of the market for raw stock supplies was controlled by the Eastman Kodak Co. of New Jersey, a $35,000,000 concern and the Eastman Kodak Co. of New York, a $5,000,000 company. The decision charged that dealers could not go to other manufacturers of such supplies because of the Eastman Kodak monopoly and of the price scale the company had established.

Changes In Tariff

Looked for At Next Session of Congress—Meetings Now Being Held in Washington

(Special to WID’S DAILY)

Washington—At the next session of Congress, there will be a general revision of the tariff. The revision is expected to include the elimination of a number of items and the raising of a few duties. The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry has appointed a committee to deal with the tariff question and it has been granted a hearing before the committee on March 9 or 10th, the date no longer having been definitely decided upon.

At present there is a small duty on films. One phase of the question is the matter of American films in foreign countries. Some film man advocates the theory that the industry could, if it found it necessary, ask Congress to introduce a clause in the duty formula providing for a high ad valorem duty on foreign films entering this country. A foreign nation which should bar out American pictures while its own film business was being reconstructed. Thus, if Germany or France should decide to keep out all American pictures for a period of one year, the industry would have a retaliatory measure with regard to the German or French films, seeking entrance into this country.

Eastman Kodak Given Two Years in

Which to Sell Factories—Worth $3,750,000
(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Buffalo—Judge John R. Hazel in the U. S. District Court, acting upon the decision handed down in 1913 that the Eastman Kodak Co. was a monopoly and represented a violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Law, has ordered the company to be dissolved and the various units formed in distinct ownership.

This move followed the withdrawal of an appeal for a re-hearing which had been filed by the company in Washington. The court's decree makes it compulsory for the Eastman Kodak Co. to dispose within two years of its Premo factory in Rochester and its Century-Folmer and Schwinn factories in the same city as well as the Aristo plant in Janestown. The lines represented by these organizations are valued at $3,750,000 and the total annual sales are said to exceed $7,000,000.

Another Kick

The following letter has been received at this office from Mr. McClure, manager of the Strand Theater, Emporia, Kan., operating the Electric and Strand theaters in that town.

"I just read with interest the letter written by Mr. Cranfield, No. 20, regarding the showing of commercialized pictures in churches and schools. Mr. Cranfield has touched on a matter of vital importance to many exhibitors, and I think it is going to be of much more importance as time goes on.

"I am attaching a letter, copy of written by Mr. Robins, of Fox Film Corp., in which he says that if I don't cancel his license, he will no longer allow me to have any pictures produced by his company. Furthermore, theificador contends that a picture being offered for the town, it is perfectly ethical to sell to the Iowa State School."

"It seems to me that a branch manager should be big enough to see that this view is not all wrong. And to see that although a policy is bad for the industry as a whole, it is not always against my interests."

"I agree with Mr. Cranfield. It is that a matter that ranks with Sunday closing as one of importance. Some of the statements that Mr. Cranfield made are absolutely true and I think it is only fair to the other exhibitors in the country have a just grievance along this line."

Brady Attacked

vinced themselves that organization is the insurance for the protection of their investments in this business. We are organized not for profit but for protection. We have for the first time a history of the motion picture, a powerful, virile national organization consisting at this time of 38 states, none of which has a representation of less than 50% and most of which has a representation ranging between 75% and 95%.

Cohen was followed by Julian Brylawsky, who launched into a strong attack on William A. Brady and the National Association because of speeches made by Mr. Brady to the exhibitors of Baltimore and Washington a few days previous. Brylawsky said, "We are using Bolshevik methods to disrupt our organization. Evidently, he and his employers are afraid of us and are trying to discredit our organization and leaders. They found out in New York that the organization stands 100% back of its leaders, and that makes them all the more afraid."

H. B. Varner spoke in the same vein, accusing Brady and "his hortots" of trying to influence some organizations, referring to a "pretended" friendship. He said they were more interested in creating dissension in exhibitor circles, in having exhibitors operate with them or in Sunday opening or censorship, a statement which was greeted with sustained applause.

Thomas Goldberg, vice-president of the Maryland Exhibitors Association, described how a meeting of the Baltimore exhibitors had been called on Tuesday, Jan. 25th, at the request of Brady, to which the latter spoke for cooperation and on censorship. According to Goldberg, who in his speech stated that the exhibitors of Maryland were considering the forming of the North Carolina Exhibitors Association, Goldberg further stated that at the conclusion of his speech Brady advised him privately that he had misunderstood him (Brady), and that Brady was against the M. P. T. O. and was about to make a tour of a number of states throughout the country. Goldberg told the assembled exhibitors that if the exhibitors of Baltimore had known Brady's intentions and feeling in the matter they would never have called the meeting and invited him to be present. He added they restated the statements and efforts of Brady to create division and thereby pledged their full cooperation and stated that Goldberg was cheered heartily by the convention for his plain speaking.

Woolworth Idea
Planned for Big String of Theaters in Cities of 25,000 Population and Under

A gigantic plan for a big string of theaters in cities of 25,000 population and under is being planned by a well-known picture man of the Middle West. He has interested several well-known New York men in the idea, and a number of talks have occurred. Whether definite plans are being solid held, it is understood that the corporation is in existence, and that a board of directors has been formed.

The plan calls for the building of theaters under a standardized plan, one house to be the replica of the other, varying, of course, in size from 600 to 1,000 seats. In each community stock in the building will be sold to local investors, and the lease will then be taken on the property by the company. The company will have the right to buy the property after a given period.

It is said that options and leases on 208 theaters have been secured, and it is expected that 1,000 houses will be built by May 1. Arrangements are being made to underwrite the corporation along the lines of saving a specific sum advanced upon the turning over of each lease.

It is said that one of the ideas will be to secure a top admission price of 15 cents, including the war tax. It is also said to be something like $12,000,000 capital is needed.

Robertson-Cole is the first distributing company to occupy its own office building. It is also the company which houses all the executive and administrative branches of its business in the East in its own working. Work on the new structure began late last spring. Of the floors in the building, 6 are occupied by Robertson-Cole. The rest are rented to various commercial

Cole and of A. S. Kirkpatrick. On the eleventh floor are situated the distributing corporation's offices, and those of the auditing department. The twelfth floor the foreign department, and its offices. On the 7th Ave. of this floor are situate two tiers of picture rooms. The thirteenth floor is reserved for the theatre. The fourteenth floor is occupied by a department store, and is thus used for the purpose of displaying the latest in fashions and household goods.

The new Robertson-Cole Building, 48th St. and 7th Ave., New York City—A lasting monument to the success and accomplishments of this progressive organization.

Gasnier Congratulates
Louis J. Gasnier, the director of "Kismet," telegraphed:

"Hearty congratulations upon entering your new home. Though young in the field you are today among the greatest. Success could not remain apart from an organization such as yours wherein honesty of policy and energy predominate. Your purpose of producing only the greatest of pictures will be rewarded."

Pauline Congratulates Robertson-Cole has received the following congratulatory message from Pauline Frederick:

"My heartfelt congratulations. With the space now at your disposal you will be able to do many things that I know you have wanted to accomplish in the past. The tremendous progress you have made is a splendid incentive for all of us concerned in production to do our utmost for R-C Pictures."

Hayakawa's Fear is a Hope
A telegram of congratulation received by Robertson-Cole from Susse Hayakawa read:

"With the high expectations I have for Robertson-Cole productions, my only fear and hope is that the large quarters you have now established as your headquarters will be not nearly big enough in a few years to come. I am proud to be associated with such a workmanlike firm, whose only demand to its stars is to make every production bigger and better."

Praise From Beban
From Indianapolis, where he is appearing with "One Man in a Million," the Robertson-Cole release in which he is the central character, George Beban wired congratulations. He said: "My hand is out to you on getting into the new building. Never has such progress been made in the industry in such a short time. I'm more than glad to be allied with your organization."

Current Pictures
Some of the Most Important R-C Releases Not to Be Missed:

The inauguration of the Robertson-Cole policy to distribute super-special productions only, dates back to the summer of 1919. In declaring for super-specials Robertson-Cole felt that the distribution of the best product obtainable was the manner in which its standard could be upheld.

Accordingly, in September last year, with "Big Happiness," starring Dustin Farnum, Robertson-Cole inaugurated its "super-specials only."

Next came "Occasionally Yours" with Lew Cody, the "great lover" of the screen. It shows the love-making star to excellent advantage.

Then followed Christy Cabanne's human document, "The Stealers," this drama, written and directed by Mr. Cabanne, has eclipsed house records in many cities and towns where it was shown. The first private showing was in the grand ball room of the Astor.

"So Long Letty," the famous screen comedy from the Oliver Morosco stage success, was next. This picture was the dream of Mary Lebby, Mrs. Barnes, Colleen Moore, Grace Darmond and Walter Hiers—was directed by Al Christie. At the present time telegrams and letters from exhibitors all over the country are arriving daily at the Robertson-Cole offices acclaiming "Letty" as the greatest picture of its type ever screened.

Pauline Frederick's first starring vehicle for Robertson-Cole, "A Slave of Vanity," was the next release. The story is a screen adaptation of Sir Arthur Wing Pinero's play, "Iris." Miss Frederick is at her best in this, "The Master of Lethbridge," a detective drama starring Wedgwood Noll, the famous character of Arsene Lupin, came next. This is one of the best detective photo plays of a decade.

"Kismet," with the inimitable Otis Skinner, and directed by Gasnier, is next. It placed Robertson-Cole among the best producers in the country. Many house records where "Kismet" has been shown, have been broken. At the Strand, in New York, where "Kismet" had its premier, it was necessary to call the police to serve the crowds. Company officials believe "Kismet" will be just as popular two years from now as it is today. Robertson-Cole is holding the first private showing of this picture in the grand ball room of the Astor, and Mr. Skinner appeared in person on this occasion.

On Jan. 30th, "The First Born," a Japanese import, appeared. Susse Hayakawa, had its premier at the Strand in New York. This is another super-special which Hayakawa has ever appeared. Box office records at the Strand for "The First Born" almost equalled those of "Kismet." The picture has been booked for the entire U. S. circuit.

Some History

The Year and General Progress of R.-C. Interesting and Important

After having started less than three years ago, with the organization of a group of people having grown up to the point of being able to buy 1600 Broadway Avenue and this week moved to its own thirteen-story office building at 46th St. and 4th Ave., Robertson-Cole's speedy development is certainly much comment in the trade.

In the middle of January, 1920, Max Wander, who had been away from the scene for about two years, was signed to make super-special attractions for Robertson-Cole. His first, "The Modern Fraulein Lady," has been released as a super-special. In January "The Clever Cheater," produced by Gasnier, was released.

On Feb. 1, a George Carpenter was signed for a super-special production, and "Holly Glamour," John G. Adolfi was selected as director. Later in February, the Toller, starring Marjorie Rambeau, was acquired. This picture proved to be one of the biggest hits of the year.

On Feb. 28, the M. A. Robertson-Cole was signed to appear in "Kismet.

On March 1, with the purchase of a new building, the company plans to produce four super-special productions a year, the first of which, "The First Born," was released later on, and "Death of the Tomb" was released in March. The company, taken place at the Hotel Astor, March 19, R. C. S. in a notable speech enunciated the Robertson-Cole production of "honesty of purpose." On March 12, a contract was made with A. Christie to adapt "So Long City." A few days after this the appointment of Pauline Fredericks for four super-specials yearly took place. A. Christie's "The Modern Fraulein Lady," released and played the Strand, New York, and other notable theaters of the country to tremendous success. When the Roberton-Cole studio building was started at Hollywood, the end of August marked the opening of the studio and the first "Big" fall releases, "Big Happiness.

On July 14, the Robertson-Cole studio building was completed and occupied.

A scene department was inaugurated at the Robertson-Cole studios in September. Nov. 1 the Robertson-Cole studios were completed and occupied.

Nov. 14, "Kismet" opened at the New York. Nov. 21, "A Man's Life" opened at the Strand. Joe Finck declared this super-special to have broken all records of the Strand.

Future Plans of R. C.

Having been able to get into its new building early in 1921, Robertson-Cole now looks forward with great eagerness to further achievements this year. Already the four pictures which it announced for initial releases during 1921 have won widespread attention from exhibitors all over the country. Others are at the point of being released. In the very near future there will be released the second of Pauline Fredericks production, which will be known as "The Good Soil." It is based on the novel of the same name by Loretta Bland, the English writer, laid in England it tells the story of a nobleman who was looking for a position and in the course of his life and his wife's death. This picture has beenleeved by Robertson-Cole executives who declare it to be the first Pauline Fredericks production, "A Slave of Vanity." Exhibitors have been won over by this picture, and there will be a few weeks left to show this second Fredericks production.

Another super-special which Robertson-Cole is shortly to make will be "What's a Wife Worth." written and directed by William Christy Cahan, who produced "The Stealers." "What's a Wife Worth?" discusses a most vital question of domestic life of today and introduces a cast which includes Casson Ferguson, Ruth Renick, Alex B. Francis and others.

Soon after this, "Good Women," by C. Gardner Sullivan, famous screen author, and which is being directed by J. Gasnier, who perpetuated Otis Skinner's "Kismet," will be released. "Good Women" is a gorgeously produced dramatic story of American life, and its players include Hamilton Revelle and Rosemary Thresh. This is the first of a series of four super-special productions which Gasnier is making for Robertson-Cole.

Robertson-Cole shortly will release the second of the Hayakawa series which is now known by the working title, "When Lights Are Low." Another picture which is being awaited with interest in the offices of Robertson-Cole is the second Max Linder production which is being produced under the working title, "Too Much Pep." From early accounts which have come to the Robertson-Cole office, this production will be a worthy running mate for "Seven Years Bad Luck," which is just being released.

William Christy Cahan has returned to the coast to start work on the third of his series of four super-specials.

Optimistic

A. S. Kirkpatrick, Vice-President and General Manager R.-C. Distrih. Corp., So Finds Present Outlook

"Conditions are improving every day in the motion picture industry. Not that they have been bad, for the trouble was far more mental than physical. Now that the industry, as a whole, has begun to realize that the greatest need is for sane, steady work along sensible lines, optimism is coming back to every tongue. This is the opinion of A. S. Kirkpatrick, general manager of Robertson-Cole Distrih., Corp.

"There is going to be a growing amount of business for all who will play fair, work hard, and use their heads," he adds. "Through the seeming conflict of ideas, a somewhat restless economic condition shines a light of great, constant and searching. To those who will not listen to this. Robertson-Cole says, this carries a truth so strong and vital as to make the executive and his co-worker, the producer, laugh at any conceivable obstacle. The light signifies the pre-eminent and constancy of merit. The message of the light is this year's: 'A good product always sells readily.' The merchant with superior goods, the artist with a finer composition, the producer with greater ability: the motion picture company with a better product, all are sought out by a public which is not thrown down to depravity, to fiction, and which always has the money with which to pay for it. Those years are only incidents in the life of an institution of permanence. Firms which refuse to wonder what the future holds, which work on steadily toward an ideal through good times and uncertain ones, are those which succeed. In the present day of readjustment we see no other group of industries beset with more obstacles. We know the public will be amused. We know it will select the most entertaining pictures and stick to fact in amusement. In these two principles we find an answer for all problems. We are sure, in the vast field of the motion picture industry, that we will never be far from the truth and that our statement is that we will never be far from the truth. We can see the great rapidity with which the motion picture map has changed since those few years ago when the first pictures were made in the present time. Those who have kept their eyes open, a principle that will to stand still is to perish. "It is our present to the industry that we consider the whole question of success in the picture business to be only a matter of the fidelity and sincerity with which the industry works together, and that exhibitor work together in giving the public the best product which is now present supply.

"The first and most essential factor on which we must build is the picture itself. How well we must make each one in order that we may keep the faith with the exhibitor, the producer, the distributor and the exhibitor; each must find his return on the investment which he made in the picture itself. The answer is easy. We make each picture as well as humanly possible.
Robertson-Cole's Progress

In the space of three years Robertson-Cole, Division of Films, grew from an organization composed of two persons occupying desk room in the Times Building, New York City, to one of close to a thousand people, occupying a thirteen-story Home Office building in New York City and operating in twenty-six cities, and on two continents.

Its growth has been the rapid progress of a firm which saw clearly, and functioned properly, from the start. It has doubled and tripled time after time, in the three short years of its existence, because of the honesty, energy and vision which have been salient forces in its administration from the beginning.

In November, 1917, the great export house of Robertson-Cole, operating in downtown New York, became interested in the handling of films. Desk room was taken with a New York film firm, and a very small start made. By March 1919 the infant picture firm had grown to the point where it had to have a home of its own, and offices at 1600 Broadway were taken.

On December 15, 1918, Robertson-Cole entered the domestic field. Soon it was in possession of its own exchanges in 25 American cities, handling good attractions which found ready sale all over the United States.

About the beginning of 1920, convinced that super-special attractions were the need of the day, Robertson-Cole began the release of a super-product tentatively. The wonderful reception which the American public gave such special productions as "The Beloved Cheater," "The Fortune Teller" and "The Wonder Man", led Robertson-Cole, in the early summer of 1920, to declare for the release of super-specials only.

The even more phenomenal success of such wonder pictures as "Kismet", "The Stealers", "So Long Letty", "The First Born", "Seven Years Bad Luck", "One Man in a Million" has vindicated most convincingly the regime of super-product.

A few months ago Robertson-Cole opened its new Studios Building in Los Angeles, where it is now making all interiors for pictures. Now it occupies its beautiful Home Office building. Inspired by so much activity and progress crowded into such a short time, it moves forward to conquer new worlds, and make new records.
Robertson-Cole Building Monument to Firm's Ideals

NOW established in its new Home Office building, Robertson-Cole begins to realize the dreams toward which it has striven during its short but eventful existence. No leading distributing company has a career so short as that of Robertson-Cole—no leading company has accomplished more substantial proofs of its permanency, or earnestness of purpose.

Examples of this are the splendid Robertson-Cole Home Office building, just occupied, and its Studios Building recently completed, and now being used to capacity in Los Angeles. They assert beyond all question that Robertson-Cole is in the business permanently. They assure the exhibitor, and all with whom Robertson-Cole is brought in contact, that the company is in the industry with its whole soul, and in it to stay.

Since the day when Robertson-Cole entered the field of motion pictures, its foremost policy has been that of honesty of purpose, and a desire to succeed on the basis of merit and fair dealing.

Each step forward has been, quietly and unheralded, the logical sequence of a carefully planned administration by means of which there could be offered to the exhibitor a service which it is his right to expect.

The removal of Robertson-Cole into its new Home Office building is only one step in the many which have brought the organization to front rank in the industry. To have achieved such a step in so short a time is convincing proof of the speed and power with which Robertson-Cole always has been characterized.

—and by which it shall continue to advance!

OPEN DAY AND NIGHT
"By Their Fruits—"

THROUGH the shuttle of the imagination the dreams of desire are woven. And out of the loom of opportunity comes the finished product—the answer to the dream.

We are living in a world of difficulties. The aftermath of the War has bequeathed to the peoples of the world vast difficulties and great problems. Facing these, strong men have hesitated in the development of their plans and large organizations have silently retarded. The world of finance has frowned upon ventures regardless of their solidity and their strength, and there has been and is an era where but one watch-word exists—"Wait."

In this chaos and unrest there have been some, not many, who, regardless of times and conditions, have welded into actuality the dreams of their desires. Among them was Rufus S. Cole.

There came into being in the picture industry several years ago the firm of Robertson-Cole. Big, portentous, important as they were in the world's export mart, their name meant nothing among moving picture people. And when the sign "Film Division" first appeared on the door facing a little desk in their office down town very few knew of them, and even less cared.

From this trifling start there developed a business. Not only a business of import as to dollars, but a business of ideas and ideals. Rufus Cole had a vision: a belief. He saw in the gathering momentum of this great industry an opportunity in which his firm could and should play an important part. Then, regardless of the wise-acres, oblivious to the many remarks, some of which doubtless reached him, the firm of Robertson-Cole persevered. They made mistakes, possibly costly ones. They made errors that probably hurt. But despite these the idea and the ideal were unconquerable. From a simple distributing organization—first in the foreign field alone—and then internationally—they have become an important factor in the producing phase of this industry. From a meager start—what can you do with one desk?—they now enroll among their stars several notable names. And there will be others, because the tree is bearing fruit. The idea is becoming a reality and the ideal is shining even more brightly than in bygone days.

In this garrulous industry, where reputations are darkened by gossip, not once in all these many, many months has there been a tinge of suspicion directed by even the worst of the gossips to this organization. And of this they have a just right to be proud. How few of our big organizations, how few of our important executives have escaped the tongue of calumny, regardless of how little they deserved?

And now they have gone into their own home. They have reared an edifice of steel and cement, everlasting in the nature of its construction and fittingly so because in a sense it typifies that splendid ideal for which Rufus S. Cole has striven and fought under galling circumstances to realize. A building which will outlast Time—an ideal as lasting. J. D.
OTIS SKINNER IN "KISMET"
By Edward Knoblock

The Miracle of the Theatre’s Art, directed by Gasnier, which is astounding not only America but the entire world. Since its release a few short months ago, it has broken more house records than any production in the history of motion pictures.

PAULINE FREDERICK IN “THE MISTRESS OF SHENSTONE”

An early release in which “The Goddess of Emotion” will be seen in the name role of Florence Barclay’s famous novel. Her popularity will be immeasurably increased by “The Mistress of Shenstone,” a tremendous outpouring of a woman’s soul.

SESSUE HAYAKAWA in “THE FIRST BORN”

From the play by Francis Powers. Of it, Alan Dale writes: “It is eminently impressive, artistically perfect and worthy of the highest praise. Such dramatic work gives dignity to the screen.”

WILLIAM CHRISTY CABANNE’S “WHAT’S A WIFE WORTH?”

A leaf from a woman’s soul, transferred to the screen by the master creator of “The Stealers,” and destined to be as big a money-maker for the exhibitor.

“SEVEN YEARS BAD LUCK,” WITH MAX LINDER

Robertson-Cole is billing this production as “The Funniest Five Reel Comet Ever Made,” because it is the sincere belief of every person who has been fortunate enough to view it, that “Seven Years Bad Luck” undoubtedly meets such high description.

maha—Manager John Loveridge of the Rialto, found it a decidedly busy week while plans to invite the women of the leading churches in his city to their annual holiday bazaar in lobby and ladies’ rest room of theater. For citizens of churches joined the bazaar and erected pretty tables, presided over by still prettier girls, in the theater.

They met with instant success, and wares went like hot cakes. The announcement had been made in the chas. that the theater had thrown a its doors for the bazaar, and church members were invited to patronize the booths. The doormen, instead of standing at the main entrance, re directed the entrance to the gallery to the lower entrance, where they took their tickets. During the week there were many people who entered the Rialto for the first time and, after organizing the bazaar, remained infixed to the show. Loveridge is confident that a name favorable acquaintance with many future patrons.

of the Keystone Tire Co., in the Su-der Supreme Court to compel him to give back seven shares of the company’s stock and $1,365 received as a divi-

The complaint signed by

Jacu, P. Shulberger alleges that the corporation was formed in June, 1919, and that while Henry Herzenbrand was president they issued a certificate to Lissberger for the stock although he they disposed of the assets of the cor-

It is alleged that the Amasco Co. agreed to pay the $75,000 debts of Blunderman-Cohen got his judgment. It is alleged that the film theater at 80 Clinton street

some of the allegations in the com-

Winchell Smith, John L. Golden,

Samuel French and the Metro Pictures, to set aside a contract for the film rights to Bronson Howard’s

“The New Henrietta.” The rights to the play were left to Mr. Robson’s mother for life and upon her death, he gets them for life. He alleges in his complaint that Samuel French sold the film rights for ten years to

Smith for $15,000 and tried to force

Mrs. Robson to take $4,500 for her share and to persuade the plaintiff to part with his interest for nothing.

The Appellate Term of the Su-

Suite Against Hall

Filed by U. S. Theaters Co., of Hoboken—Involves Federal Tax Payments

(Special to WIDE DAILY)

Hoboken, N. J., Frank G. Hall, formerly leading spirit at the U. S. Theater on upper Washington St., is made defendant in a $10,000 suit in the United States Circuit Court on behalf of the U. S. Theaters Co., who have their principal place of business in Hoboken. The suit involves the question of Federal taxes on the theater for the year prior to the sale of the controlling stocks to Frank Gersten by Hall on Jan. 29, 1920.

In the bill of complaint filed by Gersten, through his attorney, he states that Hall entered into a contract with him which provided, among other things, that Hall should pay to the U. S. Theaters Co. such proportion of the Federal tax as was due for the business done during the preceding year, in other words 1919, as the number of 600 shares of capital stock of the corporation, divided into the entire number of evidences as a fair pro rata thereof. Gersten sets forth that he was satisfied by the government, official, the bill of complaint filed against him and demands specifically that he is responsible for the Federal tax collected through the transaction. He will file his answer in a few days.

Three directors of the U. S. are interested in the States Theater Corp., of which Frank Hall is president. The company, as noted, plans a chain of theaters in Northern Jersey.

Hichens Signs

To Do Originals for Famous Players—Attached to Studio

Famous Players announced yesterday that Robert Hichens, author of "The Garden of Allah," had signed a contract with the company to write original stories for the screen. He will be attached to the London studio where he has signed to present E. Phillips Oppenheim, Sir James Barrie, Arnold Bennett and Joseph Conrad.

Contrary to various reports Hichens has not been under contract with Paramount until this time. Last year when Jesse L. Lasky wasted Hichens' willingness to write material direct for the screen, but at that time he could not enter New York, according to Lasky. That, however, has now been done.

"Capitol Theater $900,000 first mortgage leasehold serial 7 per cent. gold bonds are due $900,000 each year, June 1, 1921, to 1991. The bonds are first mortgage on the Capitol Theater building and leasehold Broadway and Fifty-first Street. The leasehold and the property are valued at $4,000,000. The company's net earnings are reported running at a rate of more than eight times the amount necessary to pay the interest charges on this issue. We believe these bonds may be given a fair rating."

Fears Nat'l Booking

As Result of Bowes-Goldsol Affiliation With Shubert Vaudeville
Circuit, So T. O. C. C. Says

The Theater Owners Chamber of Commerce fears that another attempt will be made to force a National Booking Corp. upon the exhibitors of the country as a result of the presence of several film men on the board of the Shubert Advanced Vaudeville Circuit.

The members of the organization base their fears on the fact that Edward J. Bowes and F. J. Godsol, both prominent in the affairs of Goldwyn, are on the board of directors of the Shubert Vaudeville company and because of the affiliation of Jules E.
Mastbaum of the Stanley Co. of America with the Shubert unit. They say that the U. B. O., has already served a cancellation notice on Goldwyn because of this.

The organization has referred the matter to Sydney S. Cohen, president of the M. P. T. O., since they believe it is national in scope.

Mr. Cohen is out of town for the week-end and so could not be reached for a statement.

Confidential information to hand warrants the statement that the prescision of Mr. Cohen's instructions, are on the board of directors of the Shubert Vaudeville Circuit and the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation as such in any way, and that it is merely a personal business venture on their part.

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

Omaha, Neb.—The management of the Sun, four weeks before they showed "Madame X," started their exploitation campaign with 100 eager posters, which read, in that great photoplay, "Madame X" be shown in Omaha for $1 or for 35 cents per seat! The posters were ready two weeks showing, during which time 50,000 doggers asking the same question were distributed from house to house. Teaser ads bearing the same question were run in the Omaha newspapers. Then a large display space in the newspapers announced that the picture had been shown elsewhere at $1, but that the admission at the Sun would be left to the decision of the public. A special usher with comment by what was stamped post cards were distributed asking for opinions on the admission charge. Replies were sent. The replies mostly stated that "Madame X" was a wonderful picture, but the majority favored 35 cents admission. The management then received many congratulations on adhering to their regular price for such an exceptional photoplay.

Columbus, O.—An interesting newspaper display was used by the manager of the Grand to advertise the first anniversary of the theater. The picture chosen for the anniversary celebration was "Earthbound " and the Columbus Dispatch carried for three days, a full page ad of the picture and the theater. At the top of the page, in large type, was the heading, "Southern Theater First Anniversary." Below in smaller type, was copy advertising the picture, toto, with certain leading comments by prominent men and a short synopsis of the story. Over the whole right half of the page was a fine cut descriptive of the picture. In the largest type of all was simply the word "Earthbound."
The Reasons Why
Carl A. Jones Writes Some More on Troubles of the Exhibitor—Exchanges This Time

Some of the reasons why exhibitors have trouble in running their theaters are given in a letter received earlier in the week and this time he adds to his original letter with the following:

"The real trouble, as I see it, is that the small town exhibitor figures just as prominently in a contract with one of these concerns as a Gillette razor does at a nigger picnic. The contracts on the subjects are written by and for the exchanges. All the poor dumb that buys them has to do is to furnish the coin to pay for the privilege of showing them, plus the biggest rental that can be extracted from him.

"If there are two or three houses in the town and you have been handling the special line from its infancy to the time it has a pulling-power in other words if you have "made" them in your own particular section and we have done this several times at a distinct loss—everything is okay. But directly they get a star or a picture or a series of pictures that pull pretty well and Mr. Salesman comes in to sell to them you. Tell him the highest figure that you can pay for them and "get by." Well and good. He makes up a contract. This has to be approved by "the branch" and also the New York office. Well and good—after you have given him the "deposit." That must never be overlooked, you know. Then Mr. Salesman canvases the other houses and advises them that he has such and such a picture (or series of pictures) on which the other house has offered so much. If you are a good average competitor you will swallow the bait and 'bid' on the stuff at a higher figure. Again well and good.

"Then he comes back and bids you good-bye, usually after getting playdates if possible. You reserve the dates if you can and everything is pretty. Then a week or so afterward you open up the Sunday morning paper and note that the competitor who made the highest bid is advertising your picture for an early showing. You write Mr. Exchange man and by the time the picture has played the opposition you get an answer to the effect that 'they regret that New York has failed to approve your contract and it is therefore returned.' Then you get busy trying to 'spot' something to fill the vacant dates. It is as interesting as trying to a difficult hand balancing stunt on the extreme outer edge of respectability. And it goes on, and on and on. Pardon the length, but I am full of it and 'blow up' every time the subject is mentioned.

"I would like to see these autocrats brought to the realization of the fact that some day, sooner or later, they will have to do business as a business, like commercial houses, and make the film industry a business instead of a game. They seem to be sincere in the idea that all of the brains of the universe as well as the gall (?) is found at Bagdad on the desert, or gravitates there. Mebbe so; mebbe so, old sport, but I will tell any Mr. Man, that when he takes my pennies away from me without giving me value received when I have fulfilled my part of the agreement, there is going to be a "call of a holler" that's me all over. They give you a thousand reasons, when you go to sign up, why they must take your cash, but the only reason I have been given for their not returning it is 'that they don't do business that way' or 'that they haven't got it'—that they are using it to make you a new picture.'

"I am for the film game all right. I am also for their financing their end of it. We have enough excitement looking after our own little game.'

The Zukor Mission

Now Announced for the Purpose of Affecting Reciprocal Arrangements With Producers

Famous Players issued an official statement last night defining the purpose of their expedition to Europe.

The announcement verified what appeared in yesterday's issue of WID'S DAILY concerning the trip and gave a more official flavor to the gossip that has been current both here and in London regarding the activities of Famous Players and important foreign producers, notably the Universum Film Corp. of Germany—the U. F. A.—and the Union Cinema of Austria—the U. C. I.

The statement characterized young Zukor's trip as a "mission of far-reaching importance that will extend the expansion of American motion picture pictures to European countries," and added at another point, "Mr. Zukor, in extending the distribution of American films, will investigate the possibility of entering into reciprocal agreements with foreign producers." It is expected that it will be possible to distribute their pictures in this country unless these producers measure up to the American standards. Mr. Zukor will make an intensive study of conditions in Europe and if he finds that foreign producers shall more than welcome, however, foreign productions that will satisfy American motion picture patrons and shall give the same productions every opportunity for extensive distribution through our organization throughout the United States, since we know that only through such methods of reciprocity shall we be able efficiently to circulate American made pictures into foreign countries.

"In order to obtain the best market for American films abroad, I feel that we should make clear to Europeans that any picture that they produce that is up to our standards will have a fair field in the United States, and I shall have the industry look over just what those standards are. America will give a fair showing to any foreign producer who is intelligent enough to give us the sort of amusement they want."

After confering with officials of the London office of Famous Players, Mr. Zukor will make an intensive study of conditions in England, France, the Scandinavian countries, Italy and Czecho-Slovakia. It is his purpose to view the best of the pictures made in these countries and select those best suited for distribution in America. At the same time he will work out a system of reciprocal distribution which he has been planning for some time.

He will remain in Europe for several months and will report the results of negotiations to his father, Adolph Zukor, in Paris early in April.

Lucy Cotton is under exclusive management of Edward Small, and her Metro contract was signed this morning at the office and not by George L. Clarke.

A Lubitsch Unit?

KINE. Weekly Says It Is Likely—Interesting Slant on U. F. A. and Blumenthal Activities

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

London—(Kinetograph) Weekly states in an article headed "Secret History" and speaking of Ben Blumenthal:

"Recently he made a contract with Pola Negri to go to America for a year and appear in a series of films, and followed this rapidly by forming Lubitsch producing company, which finds Ernst Lubitsch—the German Griffith and the producer of "The Tenth Generation" for America to produce motion pictures."

"Most of the big American producing organizations are already clamoring for the star and according not only to Blumenthal's statements but to the cables which he received while in London, Pola Negri has already been seen in the States as the star in the 'DuBarry' film, and the American producing units are frantic to secure her services."

"It is not yet known which of them will succeed in securing her from Blumenthal, though a significant remark was made here which said that U. F. A. was on the point of getting into closer touch with Famous Players in regard to film production."

"In this connection it must be remembered that, in Germany, Pola Negri is a U. F. A. star."

If Famous Players were to secure the star and Lubitsch a very interesting situation would arise, as we should then be faced with the possibility of getting films from America made by a German producer and featuring a German star.

"Though, when you come to think of it, that happens already."

A committee of Theater Owners' Association member of Commercial members imposed with William Brandt, chairman; Marcus Loew, B. S. At a meeting of the organization, D. Williams and R. H. Up 143 Points

The financial column of the Times yesterday morning contained the following:

"Ten shares of Eastman Kodak stock were sold yesterday on the Stock Exchange at $680 a share. This was an advance of 143 points over the previous sale made some time ago. It was only a few days back that the Kodak Co. lost an appeal to the Supreme Court against an order dissolving the company. When the rise of yesterday was noted the remark was passed that the Kodak Co. would be another Standard Oil."

Fears Nat'l Booking

As Result of Bowes-Godsol Affiliation With Shubert Vaudeville Circuit, So T. O. C. C. Says

The Theater Owners' Chamber of Commerce fears that another attempt will be made to fosit a National Booking Corp. upon the exhibitors of the country as a result of the presence of several film men on the board of the Shubert Advanced Vaudeville Circuit.

The members of the organization base their fears on the fact that Edward J. Bowes and F. J. Godsol, both prominent in the affairs of Goldwyn, are on the board of directors of the Shubert Vaudeville company and because of the affiliation of Jules E. Mastrod and of the Stanley Co. of America with the Shubert unit. They say that the U. B. O. has already served a cancellation notice on Goldwyn because of this.

The organization has referred the matter to Sydney S. Cohen, president of the M. F. T. O., since they believe it is national in scope.

Mr. Cohen is out of town for the week-end and so could not be reached for a statement.

Confidential information to hand warrants the statement that the presence of Messrs. Bowes and Godsol on the board of directors of the Shubert Advanced Vaudeville Circuit does not involve the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation as such in any way, and that it is merely a personal business venture on their part.

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellows know how you cleaned up.

Omaha, Neb.—The management of the Sun, four weeks before they opened the Madison, made an exploitation campaign with 100 eight-sheet posters which read: "Should that great photoplay, ‘Madame,’ be returned for $1 or for 35 cents per seat? The posters were given a two weeks showing, during which time $0,000 dodgers asking the same question were distributed from houses to house. Teezer ads hearing the same question were run in three Omaha newspapers. Then a large display space in the newspapers announced that the picture had been shown somewhere at $1 but that the admission at the Sun would be left to the decision of the public. A special midnight matinee was held at which the management asked for opinions, but the majority favored 35 cents admission. The management then received many congratulations on adhering to their regular price for such an exceptional photoplay.

Columbus, O.—An attention compelling newspaper display was used by management of the Southern to announce the first anniversary of the theater. The picture chosen for the anniversary celebration was "Earthbound" and the Columbus Dispatch carried for three days, a full page ad of the picture and the theater. At the top of the page, in large type, was the heading, "Southern Theater, first anniversary." The other columns were packed with advertising the picture, together with comments by prominent personalities in the theater field. Over the whole right half of the page was a line cut descriptive of the picture. At the bottom, in the spacious frame, was simply the word "Earthbound."

Middletown, O.—Two men passing a school house at recess hour would not be regarded as an unusual incident if they were ordinary men such as the children see every day. When two men passed a school house here, one of them dressed like a bumblebee, and the other leading him with a rope, the students were somewhat taken aback. Theodore Chios, manager of Sorg's Opera House, used the stunt to exploit "Go and Get It."

In the Courts

N. William Aronson got a judgment for $5,226 against. For several years in 1918 for commissions, but since that time he has been able to collect only $2,000. He started supplementary proceedings last summer for the balance, but Bushman failed to obey a court order to appear and testify. Aronson has obtained an order in the Supreme Court of this state directing Bushman to show cause why he should not be fined $2,220 balance of the judgment for contempt of court and sent to Ludlow Street jail until he pays.

A jury before Supreme Court Justice Gavegan gave a verdict by default for $2,500 in a suit of Rogers & Rogers, attorneys to recover the sum from the Rochester Film Products Co., for services in organizing the corporation under a retainer by William Fox and Henry E. Kondolf. The plaintiffs alleged that the corporation took over the contract.

The Reasons Why

Carl A. Jones Writes Some More on

Troubles of the Exhibitor—

Exchanges This Time

Some of the reasons why exhibitors have trouble in running their theaters are given in a letter received from Carl A. Jones, vice-president of the Central Amusement Co. of Bristol, Va.-Tenn.

Mr. Jones "said some things" in a letter dated March 17, and earlier in the week and this time he adds to his original letter with the following:

"The real trouble, as I see it, is that the small town exhibitor figures just about as prominently in a contract with one of these concerns as a Gillette razor does at a nigger picnic. The contracts on the subjects are written by and for the exchanges. All the poor dumb that buys them has to do is furnish the coin to pay for the privilege of showing them, plus the biggest rental that can be exorted from him."

"If there are two or three houses in the town and you have been handling the special line from its infancy to the time it has a pulling-power— in other words, if you have 'made' them in your own particular section—and we have done this several times at a distinct loss—everything is Okay. But directly they get a star or a picture or a series of pictures that pull pretty well and Mr. Salesman comes in to sell them to you. You tell him the highest figure that you can pay for them and 'get by.' Well and good. He makes up a contract. This has to be approved by the branch and also the New York office. Well and good—after you have given him the 'deposit.' That must never be overlooked, you know. Then Mr. Salesman canvases the other houses and advises them that he has such and such a picture (or series of pictures) on which the other house has offered so much. If you are a good average competitor you will swallow the bait and 'bid' on the subject in a higher figure. Again well and good. Mr. Salesman is progressing. He now goes to the third man well fortified, feeds him a line of the stuff and gets another raised bid."

"Then he comes back and bids you good-bye, usually after getting playdates if possible. You reserve the dates if you can and everything is pretty. Then a week or so afterward you open up the Sunday morning paper and note that the competitor who made the highest bid is advertising your picture for an early showing. You write Mr. Exchange man and by the time the picture has played the opposition you get an answer to the effect that 'they regret that New York has failed to approve your contract and it is therefore returned.' Then you get busy trying to 'spot' something to fill the vacant dates. It is interesting as trying to a difficult hand balancing on the extreme outer edge of respectability. And it goes on, and on, and on. Pardon the length, but I am full of it and blow up every time the subject is mentioned."

"I would like to see these antecrots brought to the realization of the fact that some day, sooner or later, they will have to do business as a business, like commercial houses, and make the film industry a business instead of a game. They seem to be serene in the idea that all of the brains of the universe as well as the gall (?) is found at Bagdad on the Subway or gravitates there. Methbe so; methbe so, old sport, but I will tell any Mr. Man, that when he takes my pennies away from me without giving me value received when I have fulfilled my part of the agreement, there is going to be a 'hell of a howler'—that's me all over. They give you a thousand reasons, when you go to sign up, why they must take your cash, but the only reason I have been given for their not returning it is 'that they don't do business that way' or 'that they haven't got it'—that they are using it to make you a new picture."

"I am for the film game all right. I am also for their financing their end of it. We have enough excitement looking after our own little game."

Big Export Deals Under Way

The Zukor Mission

Now announced for the purpose of arranging new reciprocal arrangements with producers.

Famous Players issued an official statement last night defining the purpose of Mr. Zukor's recent trip to America.

The announcement verified what appeared in yesterday's issue of WID'S DAILY concerning the trip and gave a more official flavor to the report that has been current both here and in London regarding the activities of Famous Players and important foreign producers, notably the Universal Film Corp. of Germany—the U. F. A.—and the Union Cinematografica Italiana—the U. C. I.

The statement characterized young Zukor's trip as "a mission of far-reaching importance that will extend the creation of American motion pictures to European countries," and added at another point, "Mr. Zukor, in extending the distribution of American films to European countries, will create the possibility of entering into reciprocal arrangements with foreign producers.

"European producers cannot expect to distribute their pictures in this country unless these productions measure up to the American standards and standards, Mr. Zukor says, "they shall more than welcome, however, foreign productions that will satisfy American motion picture patrons and shall give these productions every opportunity for extensive distribution through our organization throughout the United States, since we realize that only through such methods of reciprocity shall we be able efficiently to circulate American made pictures in those countries.

"In order to obtain the best market for American films abroad, I feel that we should make clear to Europeans that any picture that they produce that is up to our standards will have a fair field in the United States, and I shall do my best to outline to them just what those standards are. America will give a fair showing to any foreign producer who is intelligently attempting to give our public the sort of amusement they want."

After conferring with officials of the London office of Famous Players, Mr. Zukor will make an intensive study of conditions in England, France, the Scandinavian countries, Italy and Czecho-Slovakia. It is his purpose to review the best of the pictures made in these countries and select those best suited for distribution in America. At the same time he will work out a system of reciprocal distribution which he has been planning for some time.

He will remain in Europe for several weeks, and will report the results of his negotiations to his father, Adolph Zukor, in Paris early in April.

Lucy Cotton is under exclusive management of Edward Small, and her Metro contract was signed through that office and not by George L. Clarke.

A Lubitsch Unit?

Kine Weekly Says It Is Likely—Interesting Slant on U. F. A. and Blumenthal Activities

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

recently he made a contract with Pola Negri to go to America for a year and appear in a series of films, and followed this rapidly by forming a Lubitsch producing company, which finds Ernst Lubitsch—the German Griffith and the producer of Sumurun—to go to America to produce motion pictures.

"Most of the big American producing organizations are already clamoring for the star and the producer, according to Blumenthal's statements but to the cables which he received while in London, Pola Negri has already been seen in the United States as the star in the Lubitsch film, and the American producing units are frantic to secure her services.

"It is not yet known which of them will succeed in securing her from Blumenthal, though a significant remark made by Bratz, who said that U. F. A. was on the point of getting into closer touch with Famous Players in regard to film production.

"In this connection it must be remembered that, in Germany, Pola Negri is a U. F. A. star.

"If Famous Players were to secure the star and Lubitsch a very interesting situation would arise, as we should then be faced with the possibility of getting films from America made by a German producer and featuring a German star.

"Though, when you come to think of it, that happens already.

"Blumenthal has now gone to New York, in company with Rachman, of First National, and Jose Somlo of U. F. A., to arrange first for the viewing and selecting of the best of the large quantity of pictures which he sent from the U. F. A., and secondly for the opening up of an organization in the States for the distribution and the output of U. F. A. and some other German films.

"Towards the end of February it is understood that Lubitsch is intending to come to London to open a similar organization for the purpose of distributing German pictures."

Blumenthal, as noted yesterday, is now on his way to London and Berlin, together with Eugene Zukor and Joseph Somlo.

"Pardoning the bad is injuring the good"—Benjamin Franklin.
IN THE Louis B Mayer production of "Sowing The Wind" there comes to the screen a splendidly produced and excellently enacted drama of compelling strength. John M Stahl, the director, has built into this picture a thoroughly convincing story of striking intensity. It is a tale of passion's retributions which carries with it a singularly significant preachment and drives home unswervingly a moral that many pulpits aim for but do not hit so effectively.

"Sowing the Wind" is a story extending with the established Louis B Mayer method of film making. The locale is in the heart of the New England country, and a cast of great excellence. Miss Anita Stewart is called upon to enact a role of heavy dramatic excitation and the success in registering almost the entire gamut of emotions is a manner of such tendency that her work in "Sowing the Wind" probably touches the uppermost point of the dramatic attainments of her career. In various close views she is exceedingly beautiful. In the big dramatic moments—and there are many of them—she effects a sincerity of characterization that will yield to her a very great sympathy.

"Mr Stahl has accomplished in "Sowing the Wind" a masterful dramatization of a difficult theme. He has woven the picture a story that grips the sympathy of the spectator and frequently quickens the heartbeats in effectively organized scenes of unusual dramatic intensity. "Sowing the Wind" is a drama of its type ranks very high. It is suggestive of a wealth of excellences and has a great deal of action running throughout."

From love's first kiss to hell's abyss!
The love triumph of an outcast's daughter!
See it to see drama overwhelming in force!
It hits the heart like a hurricane!
He sowed the wind for his son, and his daughter reaped the whirlwind!

Of a woman, by a man for men and women
"Sowing the Wind" sweeps into screen greatness!
Not just drama in the last act; but every moment a moment you'll feel!

When you see it you'll know what a dramatic masterpiece means!

CHARACTER OF STORY.... Twentieth century Yankee finds himself in King Arthur’s court in the year five hundred odd
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .... 8,291 feet

In the introduction of the story the Fox organization have not used the original Mark Twain beginning.
Instead they have provided a sort of modern prologue with the hero dreaming he is in King Arthur’s court and at the conclusion he awakens and through the influence of the dream he decides to marry the girl of his choice rather than the one selected by his mother. This is quite all right since they seem to feel obliged to make it a dream.

Most of the titles, however, are not excerpts from Mark Twain. They are purely 1921 slang. It’s to be feared the great American humorist would turn in his grave if he knew people would likely be led to believe his humor consisted in such things as utterances of “—oh, sweet daddy” and “full of prune juice.” But it seemed to please those who attended the invitation showing in New York and it is granted that the satire has been well maintained. The Yankee’s handling of King Arthur and his court in a truly twentieth century fashion got lots of laughs and there is some really good comedy in the Fox production.

The director went to considerable trouble to get the proper settings for the story and a typical feudal castle is the scene of considerable action and is demolished for a thrilling finale. Harry C. Myers plays the Yankee. His work is quite satisfactory but someone should give him some lessons in the art of make-up. Pauline Starke is a pleasing ingénue while Rosemary Theby is a haughty Queen. Charles Clary is not recognizable in his whiskers as King Arthur. William Mong makes a good deal of Merlin, the magician.

Martin Cavendish is reading “A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur’s Court” when a burglar interrupts him and a blow sends him into dreamland.
He cannot realize that he is really in King Arthur’s Court and it is sometime before he is thoroughly convinced.
Martin, known in Court as the Yankee, has a memory which serves him well and when at the suggestion of Merlin, the magician, he is about to be put to death, he calls upon the sun to fade from sight. An eclipse is just due and so the sun disappears. He further astonishes the Court by causing the sun to return when they promise to save his life. (The eclipse is over).

The Yankee’s adventures in the Court make up the remainder of the picture and before he gets through with things he has King Arthur and his men doing things in up-to-date fashion, such as going to battle on motorcycles, using telephones, etc. The tournament scene is well staged and there is a shot at the very opening of the picture which is effective. It shows Mark Twain sitting up in bed while in a vision
he sees the characters he has created, pass before him.

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Judging from the way it was received at a pre-release showing, the Fox’s production of Mark Twain’s satirical novel “A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur’s Court,” it would seem that the picture is due to go over well. The comedy apparently registered sure fire and the author’s atmosphere of satire has been well maintained even though some of the titles threaten to turn it into burlesque.

You should have no trouble in getting them in when you have a name such as Mark Twain’s to use. The title is also well known. You can promise something novel in the way of amusement and there are sufficient means of exploiting it to get folks interested. Lobby displays and catchlines should attract. Say: “Suppose you suddenly found yourself in King Arthur’s

ner of living or would you call the King ‘Artie’ and have the Knights ride motorcycles? That’s the way the ‘Connecticut Yankee’ did it.”

Those who read Ben Ames Williams’ story “Black Pawl” which appeared as a serial last year in the Red Book, must have thought at the time “What a great picture it will make.” Reginald Barker has taken the story and provided it with a realistic, and thoroughly satisfactory production, following the story exactly even to the tragic finale in which the father kills his son, Red Pawl.

“Godless Men” is rather along the lines of the “Sea Wolf” type of story, the brute ship captain who rules his crew with his fists. Russell Simpson is the captain in this case and his performance is strong and always effective though perhaps those who remember “Black Pawl” pictured him a more robust and unkempt creature than the tall, thin captain portrayed by Simpson. His clothes are too well kept and his hands too white for the man “Black Pawl” was supposed to be.

Most of the action takes place aboard the schooner “Deborah.” The camerawork is all excellent and a truly vivid sea atmosphere enhances the appeal of Williams’ story. The direction is also excellent and the detail is noticeably good. James Mason is just what you imagined when you read “Black Pawl.” He plays the son, Red Pawl.

Black Pawl, so-called for his defiance of God and his brutal treatment of his crew, during one of his cruises on the schooner “Deborah” comes to a tropical island. Samuel Poor, a missioner working among the natives on the island, finally persuades Back Pawl to take him as passenger aboard the Deborah and also a young girl, Ruth Lytton, whose mother had died while attending the sick natives.

Aboard the vessel Ruth falls in love with Dan Darren, first mate, much to the displeasure of Red Pawl, “a chip of the old block” and capable of all the brutality of the father whom he would just as soon kill in order that he might rule the ship. Black Pawl feels strangely attracted to Ruth but attributes it to the fact that she is the only person aboard the vessel who does not fear him though he cannot understand why.

In one of his drunken fits Black Pawl attacks Ruth but comes to his senses when he discovers on her a small locket that contains a picture of the wife who had long ago deserted him and caused him to lose all faith. The captain then realizes that Ruth is his daughter and for the first time in years calls upon God to forgive him. He confides his discovery to the minister who insists that he tell Ruth the truth, which he does. Later Red Pawl conspires with a degenerate member of the Deborah’s crew to kill his father but before Black Pawl dies he shoots his son.

You Can Promise a Live Story of the Sea

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

A sea story always seems to have a more or less popular appeal, and in “Godless Men” there is enough that’s new to distinguish it from some other sea stories which have been done lately. Because there are so many who have read the story under the title of “Black Pawl,” as it ran in the Red Book, be sure to mention the fact. There doesn’t seem to be any obviously good reason for the producer’s having changed the title but since they have, it would be well to mention the original.

If you desire to use names be sure to use the author’s and among the players Russell Simpson and Helene Chadwick are probably the most popular. Goldwyn has some attractive posters which you can secure and their press sheet contains some suggestions for exploitation which should prove effective. Catchlines also should interest them.

The premier presentation at "The Strand," New York, broke the enviable record made by "Kismet," the high record for the house.

At "The Criterion," Buffalo, the picture broke the record held by "Humoresque." In consequence it has been held over for another week.

Tremendous crowds and enthusiastic audiences at both theatres prove that "The Devil" is one of the very great pictures of all time.

Made by exhibitors for exhibitors it is offered to exhibitors for what it is—a phenomenal box office attraction.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... About 6,000 feet

Regardless of what else they may think or say, everyone will agree that it is the acting of the Japanese star, Hayakawa, that makes "The First Born" one of the season's worth while pictures. He is truly in a class by himself when it comes to melodramatic acting with Oriental atmosphere. And the most remarkable thing about Hayakawa's acting is that by facial expression alone does he register the various emotions. There are not a great many actors of today who can do this and do it well, without overdoing it. In this connection the star's work compares with the acting of George Arliss.

Perhaps there are some who will disapprove of the story or find it a bit too gruesome at times to please them. "The First Born" permits Hayakawa to do the things he does best and in that alone it fulfills requirements even though there are evidences of improbable coincidence. There is one especially big moment in it, however, which is splendid and that brings into play the emotional ability of the star. The pathos of this bit, the death of "The First Born" is genuine. "Sonny Boy" Warde who plays the title role, proves himself a great little actor even though he has not been heard of heretofore. For long stretches at a time he remains apparently lifeless while the star is going through his emotional sequence.

Helen Jerome Eddy's performance is good but it seems it would have been easy enough for her to have made up to look more like an Oriental maid. Coro Kino is a Chinese villain. His work is splendid as is that of the other male members of the cast. The interior sets are all excellent, both those representing China and San Francisco's Chinatown.

Loey Tsing has been sold by her father, taken away from her native lover, Chan Wang and brought to the home of Man Low Yek, a wealthy owner of a gambling house in San Francisco's Chinatown. Loey Tsing was installed as Yek's "favorite." Unaware of his former love's presence, Chan Wang came to live nearby with his wife and "First Born," Chan Toy. Chan Wang soon discovered the whereabouts of Loey Tsing but Man Low Yek sought revenge because he saw the two conversing.

Man Low bribed the discontented wife of Chan Wang to come into his household and leave her husband. She did and brought the boy with her. The boy fell out the window and was killed. Meanwhile Man Low Yek has caused the death of Chan Wang's wife. The heartbroken Chan Wang sought revenge through the death of Man Low Yek and later returned to his native land with his former love, Loey Tsing.

Promise a Vivid Chinese Melodrama and Unusual Acting

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The Japanese star undoubtedly has a large following among American audiences and his type of pictures and his own splendid work in them usually meets with practically universal approval. In his latest production "The First Born," he is bound to gain new admirers and receive a deserved amount of praise for his performance of "Chan Wang." His ability as a dramatic actor is of no small importance and ranks with some of the best screen characterizations of the year such as Barrymore's "Jekyll and Hyde," "Arliss," "The Devil" and others of equal note.

The possibly gruesome or highly melodramatic moments of "The First Born" should not have any unhappy effect on the picture as a whole. It is interesting all the way through and there is a wealth of realistic Chinese atmosphere for those who like this. From the number of folks who went to the Strand on a stormy Monday afternoon to see the picture it is not unlikely that the picture will go over big. Exploitation should be easy for a production of this kind but a great deal shouldn't be necessary.

CHARACTER OF STORY......White-wing who becomes political boss and later marries society woman

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION 4,610 feet

Tom Moore is right at home in “Hold Your Horses,” an adaptation of the Rupert Hughes story “Canavan.” And he has some fightin’ part and in case you don’t know it he’s an Irishman, member of the white-wing force. Moore has the picture almost entirely to himself and he acquits himself so capably that it’s to be hoped Goldwyn can find more stories with parts so well suited to him.

The production is well done and added to the humor of the action itself, the title writer had supplied some more humor that also registers. There is one bit that got a big laugh at the Capitol. When the Irish street cleaner suddenly realizes that through the strength of his arm he has power to command he goes home to beat up “the old woman.” The caption advises the audiences that it will save the censor the trouble of cutting the scenes showing the battle and the following shot shows the results.

Daniel Canavan and his wife Honora (of no mean proportions), are immigrants in the country. Daniel, a meek, submissive sort of fellow submits to his wife’s bossing without complaint. But Daniel is greatly confused by the traffic and one day after being run down by Beatrices Newness’ carriage he decides to seek other employment. His next job is flagging traffic for a construction company which is doing some blasting. Here’s were the “Hold Your Horses” comes in. Miss Newness insists upon passing the flag but Dan tells the coachman to “Hold His Horses” and he does.

This mere bit of authority gives Dan a desire for more and when his boss pushes him he knocks the boss over, whereupon a political leader who sees the “wallop,” immediately engages Dan and later the former white-wing is a political leader himself and eventually the “boss.” There is some good comedy showing the Canavans enjoying life under more prosperous conditions.

It happens that Beatrice Newness now married to Rodman Cadbury is referred to Canavan who is the only one powerful enough to save her husband from going to the penitentiary. Rembering that it was her carriage that really started his upward stride in life, Dan consents. Unfortunately—or rather conveniently—Mrs. Canavan dies of indigestion while Cadbury is killed in a polo game. The widower and widow meet and mutual sympathy turns to love and they are married.

It isn’t long before Mrs. Canavan, 2nd, shows her distastes for her husband’s table manners and they return from their honeymoon not awfully happy. Furthermore, Dan learns that Slayton has set himself up as boss in Dan’s absence. The fighting spirit returns. Dan reinstates himself and then goes home to settle with his wife. He tells her of his street cleaning career and even makes her like it and she admits she loves him.

Get Them In and They Won’t Regret It

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You can book Tom Moore’s latest, “Hold Your Horses,” and be quite sure you’re showing a pleasing bit of entertainment. It’s ideally suited to the star and there are plenty of good laughs, enough to satisfy anyone. And then the titles—it’s only fair that caption writers should be given credit—are a part of the comedy. Goldwyn didn’t make any fuss about the show-ing of the picture but it’s one of the best comedy offerings they’ve had lately.

Use catchlines and exploitation stunts if necessary to get them in. Sell them the idea that they ought to see it, if you have to, and they won’t be sorry. Say: “From street cleaner to political boss. That’s Tom Moore’ career in ‘Hold Your Horses,’ his latest for Goldwyn, and a comedy well worth seeing.”

CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Clerk given a million provided he can spend it all within one year
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ......... 5,502 feet

With Arbuckle the star and Henaberry directing, “Brewster's Millions” turns out to be one of the year's best comedies.

Roscoe Arbuckle is not only a riot as young Brewster, but he makes a bid for the first prize in versatility when he appears as a one year old. The introduction is immense, for “Fatty” is shown in a high chair. He wears a baby bonnet and is shown playing with two pieces of lump sugar which he clumsily handles (infant-like), when suddenly he surprises the audience and delights himself with rolling them, which despite his youth indicates an inborn knowledge of the African game.

The remainder of the story which shows the hero's effort to spend one million within one year according to the requirements of his grandfather, are all amusing and then some. If Arbuckle can keep them coming like this there'll be no doubt as to his success in the feature comedy field. All anyone would have to do would be to step into the Rialto during the showing of “Brewster's Millions,” to know that it's going over big.

Monte Brewster's two grandfathers, one born rich and the other a self-made man, squabble as to the way the infant should be raised. The mother steps in and decides to bring him up her own way which results in Monte, at the age of twenty-one, being a clerk in a steamship office. At this point the grandfathers get together again and one grandfather gives him one million dollars while the other offers him five million provided that at the end of one year he can spend the one million given by the other grandfather. The conditions are that he be absolutely “broke” at the end of the year, that he will not marry for five years and tell no one of the arrangement.

Young Brewster does his best to get rid of the money, but everything he does and the wildest chances he takes, makes more money for him. He hires three men to help him spend the million, but they take too much interest in investing it safely. They secure Peggy Gray to take a job in Monte's office and manage his affairs so that he will not lose all his money. Peggy purchases some mines for Monte in Peru and the ship which Monte has hired for a pleasure cruise is used to go to Peru, but they never get there. They rescue a ship in distress and then are forced to turn back. At the last minute Monte is dead broke but is married to Peggy. But the salvage on the ship Monte rescued brings him two million, while the Peruvian government extends the time for working the mines and everything ends happily.

Receipts From This Should Buy You Something Better Than a Flivver.

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

By all means be sure to get this. Don't miss it. If you do you're depriving your patrons of one of the really good comedies of the year. They probably like Arbuckle anyway, but when they see him in this—well, at the Rialto one man was holding his sides—and he wasn't a young man either. It has almost as many laughs as “Fatty” has dollars to spend in one year. The synopsis above doesn't come near telling what the story is like. There's much more to it and every bit of it is good clean comedy.

If you can't clean up with a picture like this, there's something wrong. “Brewster's Millions” is the best thing Arbuckle has done since his entrance into comedies of feature length. You shouldn't have to go to a lot of trouble to get them interested. The title and the star should take care of getting them in and you can promise them a real live, clean comedy.
HERE are just a few excerpts from the Exhibitors Herald review: "'Outside The Law' is a melodrama that should please mightily and draw tremendously ...It is a crook melodrama par excellence, with every element of popular success. Embodies rapid dramatic action, well-developed suspense and considerable heart interest. Production first rate. Picture should be a big box-office winner. ....The picture is one of the best, if not the best of its kind that has come to the silversheet in many a month....As author and director, Tod Browning has done an uncommonly fine piece of work."

CHARACTER OF STORY............ Orphan children adopted by relative who dies and his wife does her best to spoil the girl's happiness

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.......... About 6,000 feet

There is nothing unusual about either story or production in this latest Stoll release but it averages up, as have its predecessors, as a satisfactory program attraction. A good continuity helps in no small way to relieve what might otherwise have become tedious for the picture is considerably longer than the material contained in its warrents. There is a sort of counter-plot that has to do with Russian jewel smugglers. This sequence is a bit hazy but it doesn't make a great deal of difference since the part of it that has to do with the main plot is evident enough.

There are some very pretty exterior shots which make exceptionally attractive backgrounds. One especially, that of an old and apparently deserted castle, is interesting. The director has provided a very satisfactory introduction to his story showing the two orphan children, with whom the story has to do, in their quarters in the slum. The little girl particularly did good work. There is a long list of players all of whom are capable and handle the respective roles adequately. The principal parts are handled by Evelyn Boucher, Fred A. Thatcher, Reginald Fox, Clifford Pembroke, Arthur Cullen and Dora de Winton. The picture can stand further cutting despite that it has probably already been cut, a fact that is indicated by the numerous titles.

Toni and her brother, Fane were adopted by their uncle Charles, after the death of their father, and were brought from the slums to the uncle's beautiful home, much to the disgust of his wife, Lady Henrietta. Fane is sent to a boy's academy while Toni is placed in a convent. Fane turns out to be a haughty young Englishman and Toni cannot understand the change in her brother. Lady Henrietta has him trained to suit herself.

Toni is then placed in a finishing school from which she is expelled for going outside the walls and then when Fane and Lady Henrietta threaten to place her in the Dutch school where she would be punished for misdemeanor. Toni tells her troubles to Lord Robert Wycke, Lady Henrietta's brother, but kind hearted and devoted to Toni whom he secretly loves but is not free to tell her so because of a previous hasty and unfortunate marriage with an adventuress.

Then Robert is compelled to go away on business but when she hears that she is to be sent to the Dutch school, the girl follows Robert to Florence where she remains with the housekeeper of Count de Saulnes. Word arrives that Robert has been murdered but later he returns and is free to marry Toni as his wife had been killed in an auto accident.

Use on Regular Program Basis

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You can offer this on an ordinary program basis and double give adequate satisfaction. Don't make any promises for it, however, as the story or production either, don't warrant it. In your announcements merely refer to it as a story of two children of the slums and use catchlines if you desire.

None of the players are known to American audiences so it would not be worth while to try and interest them from this angle. You might make good use of the title with lines such as "What is 'The Flame'?' See the latest Stoll production for the answer." Or "There are various kinds of flames but 'The Flame' is the greatest of all." You could use exploitation stunts to put it over but it isn't big enough for that so just announce the title and trust that they will be satisfied with it for what it is.
At last Associated Producers have come into their own! This company, launched so auspiciously months ago, has weathered the storms that inevitably beset an infant organization fighting for recognition—and now under full steam it is sailing proudly out to the open sea floating the proudest colors Associated Producers have yet carried—namely, the big Thos. H. Ince Special Production, "Lying Lips," featuring Florence Vidor and House Peters, and as if the consciousness of the greatness of this production were not enough this same company is rejoicing in the reports from the Mission Theater at Los Angeles on "A Small Town Idol," the big five-reel comedy from Mack Sennett's famous work-shop. Again it is Ben Turpin who is the hero of the piece and the critics say his work surpasses that done in "Married Life."

To those who have watched the progress of this newest big distributing organization it will be a matter of pride and intense satisfaction to see them "come into their own" through the medium of a production as big and strong as that which is given to the screen in "Lying Lips."

THOS. H. INCE PRESENTS LYING LIPS
(Associated Producers)

A GREAT PRODUCTION, FULFILLING EVERY PROMISE

Nance Abbott Florence Vidor
Blair Cornwall House Peters
Leila Margaret Livingston

For three months and more reports from the Coast have persisted in assigning a high place to Thos. H. Ince's latest production, "Lying Lips," featuring Florence Vidor and House Peters. Now the picture is here, quietly and unostentatiously it arrived, and just as quietly as it was screened for the appreciative group who had waited anxiously for its coming.

It is all that Mr. Ince promised and more. He says it is his biggest production since "Civilization." It is more than that; it is much better than "Civilization." It has stronger appeal, more humaneness, more suspense, more action, more color. It has big situations handled in a big way.

There are scenes so powerful and compelling that they simply hold one in sheer silence of admiration; it has a shipwreck scene never outdone on the screen; there is a magnificent ballroom scene, staged as only an Englishman of wealth and good taste and a vast estate could devise. But the greatest scene is the wedding in a high vauluted cathedral, the grandeur and beauty of which must live forever in the minds of all who see it.

That scene is the climax of the story when Nance Abbott, the finished product of an artificial environment, stands at the altar to be married to the man of wealth whom her mother determined she must take.

She had sought a love that clamped a woman, the man was poor, she had chosen to stifle her own soul for the wealth her fiancé could give her; she had willfully driven out of her life the man who loved her and whom she loved. Then at the last moment, standing at the altar she cried out, "Stop, I can not go on with this. In the sight of God I am the wife of another man."

And the "other man," unthinking of what Nance has done, is leaving England for Australia. Learning this, Nance throws off every vestige of the artificial environment and goes to join him. The final scene is exquisite in its simplicity, Nance is rushed aboard the steamer bound for Australia just before the gangplank is lifted; she finds Blair—and he had but that morn opened the paper with the flaring headlines telling of the society marriage halted at the altar. No words are necessary, nor is a title spoken. He knows that he has won the fight because the soul of a woman triumphed over her selfishness.

Florence Vidor, with her exquisite beauty and womanliness, is perfect in the role of Nance Abbott; she possesses charm and grace and histrionic ability that auger well for her future on the screen; House Peters is ideally cast. He is one of the most striking types of amiable masculinity and this is one of the best roles ever given him; Margaret Livingston is an altogether lovely young person who did all that was expected of her and more than you ever. The entire cast makes up to a high standard and leaves nothing to be desired.

"Lying Lips" is a great picture; it is a picture that will live. It is the one make picture because it has popular appeal. It marks an auspicious epoch in the development of the new organization sponsoring its distribution, and it is safe to predict a great future for the featured players, the producer and the distributor handling the most significant Ince successes—and on all this the exhibitor can "cash in."

CHARACTER OF STORY ..... Mountain girl forced to fight her way against rough mountaineers who first try to steal her money and then herself

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ........ 6,000 feet

There are two outstanding features that are of the most interest in Pearl White's latest production made by Fox. In the first place the story provides the star with a role which contains the sort of opportunities which she handles best and gives her a chance to do some of her stunt stuff for which she has become well known in serials. In "The Mountain Woman," Miss White has several, serial-like incidents which she handles very well. She maneuvers daring jumps, rides horseback, fights several rough mountain workers at once and in the climax she saves the grain in a burning granery by sending it down a chute and climbing down the chute herself to open the door which spills it into a deposit box.

The locations secured consist of a wealth of fine mountain shots that add considerable interest to the picture as a whole. There are scenes in a lumber camp, showing the logs floating down the river to the city and later there is a fine shot of a grain mill showing how the grain is sent down through a long chute extending from the top of the mountain to the station below, from whence it is shipped.

The direction is good and the interest is kept up pretty good until the end of the fifth reel when it sags for a time until the rather effective climax.

After the death of her father, Alexander McGivens—called the 'gal in pants'—with the aid of her father's friend, Will Brent, manages to float the logs down the river. Alexander receives cash for the logs and prepares to return to her home, but Brent overhears Jace Mallows, an admirer of Alexander who has been repeatedly repulsed by her, plotting to rob her. He warns Alexander but she says she can take care of herself and that she starts off alone.

Bud Sellers, who had shot the girl's father while in a drunken fit, offers his assistance even though Alexander hates him. On the way Alexander is attacked by Mallows and his gang and taken to an old cave where they rob her. It later turns out that Alexander had given the money to Bud to bring back for her and the package the thieves got was only paper.

Back home alone Alexander is annoyed by the attentions of Mallows, also Jack Holloway, who is posing as a lumberman but in reality is a rich New Yorker, and unscrupulous, and Jerry O'Keefe. To escape them all Alexander goes to her uncle but is followed by Jerry. Mallow and his gang also follow, trap Jerry in the granery and set it on fire, but Jerry makes his escape through a grain-chute and later Alexander realizes it is Jerry she loves.

You Can Promise the Star in a Role Ideally Suited to Her

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The thing to talk about in announcing the showing of "The Mountain Woman," is that Pearl White has a role more suited to her ability than anything she has had in sometime. She is best known by "fans," for her stunt stuff in serials and in this she has many opportunities to show what she can do in this line. Tell them she makes two daring escapes and in the climax saves all the wheat in a granery from fire and also saves her lover's life.

Tell them the story is an adaptation of Charles Nevills Buck's novel "A Pagan of the Hills." Promise them some fine exterior settings. They're really splendid. Catchlines can be used to good advantage. Say that the star is the only woman in the cast and that she plays a part that will please the majority and will delight her admirers.

CHARACTER OF STORY...... Sorely tried wife who shoots husband when he plans to take her child and go away with another woman
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .......... 5,788 feet

The second Frothingham production starring Bessie Barriscale is an adaptation of Mary Lerner's story "The Living Child." H. H. Van Loan has prepared the screen version. The story is essentially one dealing with the familiar eternal triangle—a wife, a husband and the other woman—and regardless of the fact that there is really no evident happiness in the picture, good direction and a competent company of players have managed to make it fairly interesting and it holds the attention even though, perhaps, it isn't the sort of entertainment most folks want in pictures.

It is probably the mother love theme running through the story that will have the most appeal. It consists of the efforts of a mother to keep her child close to her while her idler-husband desires to bring her up as a "regular sport" and eventually plans taking the youngster away with him when he decides to leave his wife and go to Canada with "the other woman."

Ruth Marshall had promised to wait for Phillip, whose business called him to China. But when a telegram announced her lover's death, Ruth considered marrying the wealthy but idle Richard Janeway, mostly because her mother said it was her "duty" to marry a rich man. So Ruth and Richard were married. But Richard retained his old habits and the friendship of Lucia Deeping, a fact which caused Ruth great unhappiness.

Two years passed and the only link between Ruth and Richard was their little girl. During one of his parties which he gave in his own home, Richard brought the child down to entertain his guests. The mother, enraged at having her child brought to mingle with such people as her husband's friends were, took the child back to her room. For this Richard put her out of the house and planned to go away with Lucia, taking the child with him.

But he did not go, for Ruth re-entered the house and shot her husband. Those who knew the truth remained silent while the coroner pronounced it suicide.
Talk about Star's Performance and Mother Love Theme

Bessie Barriscale in
"THE BREAKING POINT"
J. L. Frothington Prod.—Hodkinson

Because of the mother love theme contained in it "The Breaking Point" will probably be more favorably received than some other pictures based on the familiar domestic troubles situation. In fact it is a toss up which of the two sides of the story is the more powerful—the mother and her love for the child or the faithless husband and his affair with the unscrupulous Lucia.

Like in her previous picture "The Broken Gate," the star has a “suffering" role but in "The Breaking ending that would be expected. The heroine’s first love does not return for the “and they live happy” ending. Unless you know the picture’s good points won’t overcome its main situation, you should make it go satisfactorily. Point” the part compels a greater amount of sympathy and Miss Barriscale’s performance is sincere and convincing. Another feature in favor of the offering is the fact that it gets away from the sort of “movie"

Imagine Constance as a Quiet, Submissive Mamma’s Girl, if You Can Constance Talmadge in

"MAMMA’S AFFAIR"

ASSO. First National Pictures, Inc.

DIRECTOR Victor Fleming
AUTHOR Rachael Barton Butler
SCENARIO BY... John Emerson and Anita Loos CAMERAMAN Oliver Marsh

AS A WHOLE... Hasn’t nearly the humor of former Talmadge-Emerson-Loss pictures

STORY... Stage play adaptation has only fairly good comedy situations and they’re short-lived

DIRECTION... Probably did the best he could

PHOTOGRAPHY... Good

LIGHTINGS... Clear

CAMERA WORK... Good

STAR... Not the Constance of former pictures;
the role forbids it

SUPPORT... All fulfill requirements

EXTERIORS... Not very many

INTERIORS... All right.

DETAIL... Adequate

CHARACTER OF STORY... Young girl whose life consists of humoring her hysterical mother

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION... 5,584 feet

Maybe it occurred to someone that Constance should be given a chance to show what she could do other than being a delicious flirt and a vivacious young de-butante and that’s why they selected Rachael Barton Butler’s play in which the star lacks all opportunity to vamp or get into mischief. Yes, Miss Talmadge can do it, that’s granted. But she’s not nearly as delightful as the sober, unworried daughter of a “mama” who throws a fit of hysterics every time she has an idea that her “precious little daughter” is getting away from her apron strings.

The prologue which tells how the authoress gets her idea for the story is the best thing in the picture.
It shows Adam and Eve in a garden. The serpent tells Eve to eat the apple but Adam takes it away from her. Then the serpent tells her to go into hysterics and Adam will give her the apple. The titles here are Emerson-loos, no doubt about it, but the others might have been written by John Doc.

Then they continue with the modern version. Effie Shannon is the “mama” whose nerves are such that she gets hysterics at the thought of losing her daughter. Her acting is good but she is required to go through the same performance so many times that it eventually “gets on your nerves.” Judging from the matinee audience at the Strand this seemed to be the case and the genuine laughter usually occasioned by a Constance Talmadge picture was conspicuously absent.

Mrs. Orrin, Eve’s mother, and a Mrs. Marchant who lives with them, have decided between themselves that Eve shall marry Henry, Mrs. Marchant’s son, an effeminate youngster with rimmed glasses. Fearing her mother’s nerves, Eve is willing to marry Henry and the prospective bride and groom with the two mothers go to the birthplace of Mamma Orrin, where the wedding is scheduled to take place on Mamma’s birthday.

During the stay at the hotel Mrs. Orrin has another of her “attacks” and Doctor Harmon is called in. He soon discovers the exact trouble and orders Mrs. Orrin to bed and insists that she doesn’t even see her daughter. The affectionate mother, however, disobeys the orders and eventually Eve’s nerves actually give way and the doctor is again called. He takes her away from her Mother but later when Henry accuses him of being a fortune seeker the doctor refuses to have anything to do with Eve.

Finally Eve’s eyes are opened and she uses the “treat ‘em rough” theory on her mother and besides winning the love of the doctor she cures Mamma of her hysteria.

Will Get by with Star’s Admirers but Not with Those Who Don’t Know Her

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The fact that this is a Constance Talmadge picture is sufficient reason for booking it and those who like the star herself may not find fault with “Mamma’s Affair,” even though it’s far from being what they expect to get from her. It’s humorous moments are so few and far between that it’s hardly fair to call it “comedy.” An affectionate mother saying “Kiss me, dear” and then throwing a fit of hysterics right after it, isn’t very funny.

And then too, Miss Talmadge really shares stellar honors with Effie Shannon, who, in the role of the mother, has just as important a part as the star and after all it’s her “affair.” It isn’t likely that “Mamma’s Affair” will hurt the star’s reputation any but it’s sure to make them want more “Virtuous Vamp’s.” “Good References,” and stories that provide her with parts to which she is best suited.

Funny Situations Make This Amusing Farce

SUPPORT........ Katherine Perry looks pretty but doesn't do much. Rest fair

INTERIORS ................. Correct
DETAIL .................... Fair
CHARACTER OF STORY......Typical farce situations resulting from one man claiming another's wife as his own

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION......About 5,000 feet

Some writer has said that there are only three possible plots for farce, and as far as screen farce is concerned, only one of these seems to ever come into use. That one concerns mistaken relationship, and always gets a man into a bedroom with some woman other than his wife. When it's well done it's funny, and "The Chicken in The Case" is a good one of its kind.

There are a number of near-scarealous situations developed in rapid succession, after a somewhat dragging start, with each one having an increasing comedy appeal over the one before.

They are all funny, but some people in every audience are going to object to one or two of the more daring scenes. These could almost as well have been suggested as actually screened, and it is doubtful if all of them will get by the censors.

The director knew when he had a particularly funny situation, and he worked some of them over time. A couple of them lose some of their punch on this account. The portion in which the hero's aunt insists upon seeing her nephew and his supposed wife established for the night starts out very amusingly, but it is held so long that the fun dies down.

Moore does better comedy work in this one than in any of his recent pictures, and has sensed the full humor of every predicament in which he finds himself. As much cannot be said for Edgar Nelson, who, as the husband of the woman in the case, has many comedy opportunities in which he fails to register much. Katherine Perry is pretty, but she seems lacking in expression, and at times, rather uneasy.

Steve Perkins' Aunt Sarah has charge of his inheritance, which he cannot have until he is 44. When Aunt Sarah suggests that if he would marry he might have the money now, Steve borrows the wife of his friend Percy Jones.

Aunt Sarah thought that Steve's wife was the better qualified to handle his money, so she leaves the entire fortune in the wife's hands.

Aunt Sarah continually finds Percy and Winnie together, which is natural, but arouses the old lady's suspicions. She drags Winnie to a cottage in the country, where Steve is falling deeply in love with Ruth Whitman, the next door neighbor. A host of complications follow. Steve finally marries Ruth, and when Aunt learns the truth, she forgives them all.

Use Star's Name and Play up the Farce Situations
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

If Owen Moore is popular with your patrons, his name will be your most important point in advertising this. Tell them that the star is at his best in his present role, and talk about his comedy work. You can recall some of his previous vehicles such as, "Picadilly Jim," "The Poor Šimp," and "The Desperate Hero."

Play up the bedroom stuff, and make mention of the number of ticklish and embarassing situations in which the hero finds himself. You can promise a lot of laughs and a very amusing picture to lovers of farce. Stills of some of the more daring scenes will be pretty sure to attract a lot of attention in your lobby.

You can use this catch line: "The girl he loved watched him borrow another man's wife. Then see what happened at the blank theater."

DETAIL .................. Nothing wrong
CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Western dance hall girl wins love of man by mothering his child
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... About 6,000 feet

In "No Man's Woman," the Helen Gibson Prod. have made a typical drama of the western frontier of the last generation, with most of the types familiar to such stories. It contains an abundance of shooting and the heroine is a dance hall heroine who rules the "boys" with a high hand. This is what they want, where they want westerns, therefore this one should prove of average satisfaction.

The direction for the most part, is all right. After a half reel that drags at the beginning, the action runs along rapidly and builds the interest up to a well executed climax. The main criticism is that there are a number of characters introduced in rapid succession, two of which are widows, each with a child. As the story shifts quickly from one family to another in places, this will possibly result in some confusion.

Helen Gibson plays the dance hall girl whom all the town gossips scorn, in a manner to compel sympathy and hold attention. There is no one else in the cast whose performance is noteworthy, but they are all good types, and their work is satisfactory.

Regarding detail, the titles have a tendency toward "meller" wording which might be improved. The fist fight at the climax has been very well done and provides an exciting finish.

Cherie is the favorite of a tough western dance hall and gambling den. "Ace" Walch comes to the place and becomes the pocker dealer. He falls in love with Cherie and tries to win her but his ardent love making meets with a slap in the face. Walch tells her that some day she will beg him to come to her house.

Meanwhile, Bruce McLeod is returning, almost dead, from the desert gold fields. Finally reaching civilization, he finds that his wife, Martha, has gone away with a gambler named Cullum. He goes gunning for them.

Cherie nurses Mrs. McLeod in an illness which results in her death, and then adopts the little son. To hold him against the old gossips of the town, Cherie claims him as her own, with the result that her reputation is further stained.

McLeod sees Cherie and falls in love with her, until he discovers that she is a famous dance hall girl. As he sits in a poker game with "Ace" Walch, Cherie, who knows that her little adopted boy is McLeod's son, brings the child in and tells him to go to his father. The boy calls Walch "daddy Cullum" and McLeod realizes that this is the man he seeks. A fight follows, in which McLeod bests the villain, who is then apprehended as a fugitive from justice.

McLeod now realizes the true worth of the dance hall girl, and they plan their honeymoon.

Should Satisfy Western Fans But Don't Promise Too Much

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor.

If your audiences are enthusiastic about Western pictures, they will probably be pretty well satisfied with this one. You can tell them that they will get a lot of exciting gun fights and a thrilling fist fight, as well as telling of the human interest theme of an apparently bad dance hall girl who in reality was made of the finest stuff. If Helen Gibson is known to your patrons, use her name, and talk about the quality of her performance in the picture. The title is suggestive for effective copy and catch lines which will create interest. Something like this might be used: "He returned to find his wife with another man, and his child in the keeping of a dance hall girl. See how he solved the problem in "No Man's Woman." In talking about the picture it will not be well to promise anything exceptional.

Hobart Bosworth, who has portrayed probably more red-blooded, two-fisted types than any other screen star, has another part in "His Own Law," which calls for just the brand of acting that best suits him. It isn't as big a picture as "Behind The Door," but it is a powerful story, well told, and with Bosworth giving a strong, forceful characterization it makes a thoroughly satisfactory offering for a majority of picture patrons.

While Bosworth's work stands out prominently, the performances of Roland V. Lee, Jean Calhoun and little Mary Jane Irvine will be certain to win the approval of most audiences. They all handle their parts in a most intelligent manner, and their work is very pleasing.

Use the Star's Name and Talk About the Problem

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Unless you know that your audiences do not care for pictures with as heavy a theme as this one, you can be pretty certain of satisfying them with "His Own Law." First of all, you have a very popular star to advertise. His work in "The Sea Wolf" and "Behind The Door" will be remembered favorably by most picture goers. Talk about the strength and bigness of the part, and about Bosworth's dramatic work in it.

The director has made the climax a totally unexpected one, and the suspense created in the last part of the picture, when the hero fights out his problem, compels attention.

The thrills are there; furnished by two big fist fights, and a plot to do away with the engineer-hero before he can complete his construction job. There is some entertainment for everybody, and for those who prefer a little deeper plot, this one should be very satisfactory.

J. C. MacNeir, a construction engineer of repute, becomes greatly attached to a young French engineer, Jean Saval, whom he meets during the course of one of the drunken sprees in which he indulges between jobs. After a night spent in a cheap lodging, MacNeir takes Saval home with him and both start out on a construction job in Chinook.

Here Saval falls in love with Sylvia Harris. He is suddenly called to the colors by France, and as there is no one there to marry him, he can only pledge his faith with the wedding ring which he had bought.

When MacNeir learns that Saval has been killed in battle he marries Sylvia, so that his friend's child may have a name and a father.

They are happy together as Saval gradually becomes less distinct in Sylvia's memory. Then, after four years in a German prison, Saval returns. He denounces MacNeir, who has sacrificed everything to protect Sylvia and the child. He at length learns the truth and, convinced that Sylvia loves MacNeir, he determines to leave. MacNeir decides that he must be the one to go, and while he is very much in love with Sylvia himself, he tells "Frenchy" that he has always considered Sylvia as his (Saval's) wife, not his own.

They agree to leave the decision to the girl, and though she has a tremendous regard for MacNeir, her heart forces her to choose Saval, and MacNeir congratulates them both, smiling through his tears.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ......... 4,531 feet

This is the sort of picture on which it is difficult to pass judgment. For there will be those who will like it really well and be thoroughly satisfied while others will look upon the improbable and far-fetched side of it and not be satisfied. The production itself is satisfactory enough and a competent cast does all that the scenario required. With the exception of Truman Van Dyke, who does not appear to know just what to do at the right time, the players are all well suited and Miss Myers as the star is pleasing although her emotional work is not altogether convincing.

The story has been adapted by Marion Fairfax from a novel by Marjorie Benton Cooke and the director has elaborated a bit to bring it up to feature strength—or at least feature length—by presenting some tableaux. A bit of Greenwich Village atmosphere may please those who like this sort of thing.

Jane kept house for a group of village artists although she was pretty sure that some day she would be a successful playwright. She had already offered her first attempt for consideration but Christiansen, to whom she had submitted the play, admitted it had possibilities but as he confided in a friend, he couldn't help a lady unless he loved her a little. Among those whom Jane worked for was Jerry, a young artist, popular with the fat and ugly society women. In order to safeguard himself against the wily society women and one in particular who seemed bound to fasten herself to Jerry, the young artist asked the domesticated Jane to marry him.

She at first refused but when she remembered that Christiansen told her she would have to know more of life before she could really write a play, Jane married Jerry and they lived a very matter-of-fact existence and even after young Jerry arrived, there was no closer tie, between the man and wife. But the time arrived for Jane to re-write her play. With the aid of Christiansen it was ready for production and on the opening night Jerry began to realize he really loved Jane, when he saw her with Christiansen and later when after following her to the theater, he saw her acknowledging the call for "author."

Misunderstanding Jane’s relation with Christiansen Jerry reproached her, and she left him. Then the baby was taken seriously ill and a telegram brought no response from Jerry, whereas a phone call brought Christiansen and a specialist within an hour. The telegram had been delayed and when Jerry did receive it he rushed to his wife only to find Christiansen at the bedside with her. Thinking she was happy with the other man Jerry went away but eventually Jane went after him and they patched up their differences and started over.

The Star’s Name and Perhaps Village Atmosphere Will Attract

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

If you are accustomed to playing Universal’s product and secure satisfactory results with their regular line of program stuff then you can offer them Carmel Myers’ latest picture and undoubtedly please them. If they like the star that should be sufficient to make them want to see the picture. Her work is well done and she photographs splendidly. Play up the Greenwich Village atmosphere and post some stills of these scenes in the lobby.

The title may have a certain drawing power so you might link it up with catchlines such as “He married a domesticated girl to protect himself against marrying a society woman. She married him because a producer told her she needed to know more of life before she could write a play. See the result of this ‘Mad Marriage,’ Carmel Myers’ latest picture.
Some Short Reels

"Fresh From The Farm"—Universal
Type of production..........................2 reel comedy

While there isn't enough material to hold both reels up to standard, there are a number of good bits in both parts, with several good laughs, equally divided. Some of the business is new, and this has been sandwiched in between fairly good slapstick in such a way that the greater part of the whole thing provides some amusement. The part with the comedian coming to the city as a hick, and immediately runs into a silk hatted slicker who relieves him of his valuables. Then comes a good bit when the hick gets suspicious of everybody, and thinks that every accident is a plot to ruin him. He gets into trouble and-ducks policemen for a time, which is old stuff and overworked in this one. Then comes some old time slapstick in the form of a fight in the kitchen of a boarding house. This part, with the spider fights, makes several short reels. The comedian puts the stuff over very well, and makes the most of every stunt they've given him. There's a big laugh toward the end when he ties the chef to a truck which is about to go, and has to have the rope cut by a street car, and the chef freed. A satisfactory number.

Kineto Review—"Liquid Gold in Texas"—Kineto Co.
Type of production..........................1 reel pictorial

The "liquid gold" referred to in the title is oil, and the reel covers the production end of the oil business in detail, from the beginning of the drilling, to the time the refined and finished products are loaded for export. The drilling machinery, including close views of several types of drills, and the actual commencement of operations, is first shown, with views of the huge temporary wells, prepared for the expected strikes. The drill then strikes oil and a gusher well is seen in action. The next part shows the intricate conveying, and refining system, where the oil is pumped, first, into a main reservoir with a million barrel capacity, and from there piped to stills in which all the products are separated and refined. From here the oil products are loaded into tank cars, carried to the coast, and piped into tank steamers. All these processes have been well photographed, and joined compactly to make an interesting reel. It should prove an entertaining filler for any type of audience.

Paramount Magazine—Famous Players
The latest addition starts off with a cartoon, very short and jerky, and which doesn't amount to much. The next part is titled: "Webster Was Right." It first defines the word "worm" in dictionary terms, and then there follows a little humorous story of a hen-pecked husband, who is brow-beaten by his better half into doing all the house work. When his neighbor's pretty wife runs in and finds him in the kitchen, the worm turns for a minute and he enjoys a soothing smoke and a chat with the charming neighbor. However, his wife comes back and catches him and he's worse off than before. This makes a nice animated bit. The reel concludes with a Bobby Bumps cartoon by Earl Hurd. This is immensely funny and entertaining by reason of some very clever combinations of photography and drawings, as well as the absurdity of the whole thing. How the picture is after being drawn, steal the ink bottle from the artist and make some more characters on their own account, and how Fido finally saves Bobby from death by erasing the villain's hand, is all good stuff. While the first portions of the reel are only fair, this cartoon makes it a good number.

Kineto Review—"Spiders and Their Victims"—Kineto Co.
Type of production..........................1 reel nature study

This whole thing is an interesting closeup study of various specimens of spiders, showing their chief characteristics, and in particular the ways in which they capture and overcome their victims. It has all been remarkably well photographed, so that the actions of the little creatures are very plainly shown.

One of the most interesting bits is a fight between a spider and a big beetle, who scar it out in front of the camera like the hero and villain in a thriller. Another bit shows a spider enclosing a grasshopper in a web, binding the insect as firmly as a straight jacket. Nearly every kind of a spider in existence is shown. There is a fight between a spider and a cockroach, and one between a wolf-spider and a scorpion. It forms a novel bit of entertainment and will do nicely for a short filler.

"Golf"—Educational
Type of production..........................1 reel sport magazine

This is a very short subject, in fact little more than a half reel. Most of it is done in the Cinal slow motion process, and the whole thing is descriptive of different golf strokes. A professional golfer performs before the camera, and his use of the club is splendidly shown with the slow motion. The drive, iron shot, mashie approach and several long and short puts are presented in detail. It will be intensely interesting to anyone interested in golf, but falls short in general appeal. For that reason its use in the program is questionable, unless its length recommends it where a very short filler is wanted.

"Lobchinvar of The Line"—Pathé
Type of production..........................2 reel Western

The story for this one was written by Holman Day, and the main theme lends itself to the screen pretty well. But the production isn't so good. Nearly every member of the cast has the stamp of amativeness upon him, and their gestures are frequently stiff and conventional. It is a story of the Canadian boundary. The hero is a young United States customs patrolman, and the villain is a smuggler. The boundary line runs directly through the store belonging to the heroine's father. The old man has forced his daughter into a marriage with the smuggler, and the latter takes every opportunity to insult the hero, while remaining on the Canadian side. At the last moment before the wedding, with the aid of a Scotchman, the hero "pulls a Lobchinvar" and rides away with the bride. Because it is good material, there is some interest, but the mediocrity of the acting detracts. It's a fair offering.

"Paths Of Glory"—Chester—Educational
Type of production..........................1 reel scenic

The "Paths Of Glory" referred to are the ancient roadways around the city of Peking, China, along which the bodies of dead emperors were carried for many hundred years to their tombs. The reel does not, however, confine itself to views of these interesting highways, but presents a number of interesting scenes in the city itself. First are shown great camel trains of wool and other products arriving from Mongolia. The market place with its queer displays of merchandise is then seen, and some views of the crowded and narrow streets, which look not unlike the lower East side of New York. Then there is a shot of the home of the President, several views in the grounds of "The Chinese White House," and some close-ups of the President himself. Then comes the "Paths of Glory." These roads lead out of the city, and are lined on either side with immense statues carved from granite. The roads lead into cedar groves, in which are the elaborate tombs of the ancient emperors. The intricate carving, and the infinite labor of building these sepulchres is evident from some views of the detail. A good reel.

"Burglars Bold"—Pathé
Type of production..........................1 reel comedy

One of the Vanity Fair series, featuring Eddie Boland and the Vanity Fair Girls. This one lacks punch in most of the stuff that is put over, and they haven't enough gags to cover the ground, with the result that the only funny bit is the
Short Reels

Kineto Review—"Morocco"—Kineto Co.

Type of production: 1 reel pictorial

While its title is "Morocco" this picture confines itself entirely to the city of Fez, the capital of that country. A series of views from a high spot near the city start it off, and the rest of the reel is made up of street scenes and a style of types of natives. The ghost-like veiled women, who go about the street all in white, with nothing visible except their eyes, are shown. Views of the walls of the city, with their huge gates; the entrance to the Sultan's palace, the ornate temple, and the church school, where children are educated by the priests, are then presented. A unique irrigation devise, peculiar to the country, and operated by oxen makes a picturesque scene. The reel concludes with views of the public market place, with every kind of merchant calling his wares, and several street scenes. The country shown is little known to the average audience, and therefore somewhat interesting, but the reel ranks as only an average of this kind.

"The Drifting Kid"—Universal

Type of production: 2 reel comedy

A little story is well told in this short feature, starring Ed (Hoot) Gibson. Some of it contains the same business found in numbers of other Westerns, but on the whole the idea has a novel twist and it makes a good picture of this kind. Gibson is supported by Gertrude Olmstead, the winner of a recent beauty contest, and she gives a pleasing performance. The "drifting" Cowboy, Ed, is evidently trying to be happy, but not succeeding. The ranch foreman tells him that the "boss" is coming with her niece, and when Hoot meets them at the train, he decides that his drifting days are over. He has big competition from the ranch "dude" for the young lady's affection, and things come to a show down at a party given for her. Hoot takes the "dude" out to fight it out, and when the "dude" draws a gun, he is shot by another cowboy. Hoot chases the killer on horse back and brings him back. The Sheriff hears his explanation of why he killed the man, and is satisfied to let him go. As Hoot is about to "drip" on, the girl makes him realize that it is he whom she loves and not the "dude." A satisfactory two-reeler.

Kineto Review—"Visit to a Bird Store"—Kineto Co.

Type of production: 1 reel pictorial

Nothing unusual, or particularly interesting features this one. It presents close-ups of the various birds and small animals commonly found in bird stores, parrots, owls, monkeys, ferrets, and other well known birds and beasts shown. The monkeys furnish a short bit of amusement by their antics, and another amusing bit is when the parrot faces the camera and tells the story of the "bird store." The bird store makes a good picture.

"The Mormon Trail"—C. B. C. Film Sales

Type of production: 2 reel Western

This short western is typical melodrama, with no point overlooked, but it's good entertainment of the type for all that. Where westerns are demanded, this is the kind they want. This one moves along with a lot of speed, and crams considerable suspense into the last reel. It's well enough staged and acted too, to make it up to the standard of this sort of picture. It will be satisfactory when you want a short western. The story starts with a train of prairie schooners crossing "The Mormon Trag" in the West and finally meets in the mountains on the way to meet their sweetheart. Jim's brother Jack leaves the train and that night it is held up. Jack is suspected and he gives himself up, but it is finally proved that his brother was the robber, in partnership with the owner of the train. Jack is about to be hung by the enraged travelers when Jim, dying from a gun wound, confesses, and Jack wins Kate, whom he has loved all the time he has been away. It is a good picture and keeps the audience interested throughout, but it does not provide a shock.
Goldwyn induced America's authors to cooperate in their productions on the studio lot

First to conceive the idea of securing active aid of eminent novelists, Goldwyn has followed a big idea to its fullest development

WATCH for Rupert Hughes' Dangerous Curve Ahead, (a deft comedy drama of domestic felicity), Gouverneur Morris' A Tale of Two Worlds (a colorful and powerful Oriental play by the author of The Penalty), Gertrude Atherton's Don't Neglect Your Wife (a box-office title if there ever was one!)

THESE are not adaptations from novels—they are original stories by the author, produced by a competent director under the watchful eye of the author. They represent the story ideal that Goldwyn established and is living up to. This point will be best illustrated by results on your attendance records.

Burned up cable tolls. And O’Brien finally came home. At the same time United Artists started their own foreign distributing organization. And John Tippett smiled. At the Astor. Funny little smile. But it meant a lot. Which raises a question. How can English and French distribution pay? With block booking.
And a flooded market. London the dumping place of filmdom.
Productions arriving showing two years off. Nice and healthy.
Especially if you need money quickly. Very pretty. V-e-e-y!
But who’s holding the bag?

LITTLE OL’ FILM DOCTOR
Uses his own degree. Something like this. A B L W T D G T R S. Which translated means: “All bad little movies when they die go to Ralph Spence.” Formerly with Bill Fox. But had so many outside offers decided to die from film colic in his own plant. Working on a couple big ones now. Gets lots of money for tinkering. Authors yelp. Don’t know their brain babies. When Ralph operates on ‘em. But Ralph says hush!
Nobody’d ever see ‘em if I didn’t half kill ‘em. There y’are.
But such lives have their own end. Spence will be haunted. To death. By the heroes he’s chopped to bits. The heroine’s he’s emasculated. The wills he has ignored. Ha! Ha! Laugh.
Fiendishly. That’ll be his finish. Film colic’s a terrible disease.

LIVING TRUE TO TYPE
Jake Wells. Boss of Richmond. Regular fellow. Once upon a time a baseball player. Then got into the show business.
Made a fortune. And one mistake. Flopped on the First National southern franchise. Now trying to get it back. At a heap more money. But that’s neither here nor there. Just reverted to form. Bought a baseball club in the Virginia league. So some day he and Fatty Arbuckle can swap stories. Fatty owns a franchise in the California league.

NEGATIVE COSTS NOT NEGATIVE
Not for next season. At all events. For the big specials, yes. All that’s needed. But for the general run? Well; that’s different. At least so many of the big men say. Somewhere around $100,000 average general run. For general production.
And that’s all. It’s got to be enough. So the bankers say. Risk too great; chance too small. Make as good as is needed for that figure. So “they say.” Who’s “they?” Flock of people.
In nearly every big company. Some of regular program companies have issued orders already. Cut out the waste. Don’t stink.
But get it in—for a hundred thou. As Tubblysk said:
“S’nough.”

STAR BUSINESS BOOSTER
Fred Warren. Seldom breaks into print. But has this to say.
About “The Kid.” “One of greatest things for the entire business. Why? Remember the flu? Remember how business was shot. All to the bow-wows? What brought it back? Chaplin in ‘Shoulder Arms.’ Business spotty now. Quiet in some places.
What’ll bring it back now? Another Chaplin. Sure fire.”
Means something.

Smashing!

They are not only smashing every and all previous records at the Strand with Charlie Chaplin in "The Kid," but Manager Joe Plunkett hopes with the aid of the Police Department and the Fire Department to hold the mobs in check and prevent the smashing of everything that is movable and stationary, too.

At 8:30 Sunday night, the sale of tickets was stopped. At that time the doors were smashed and the crowd that jammed into the theater was so dense that people were crowded around the projection booth in the balcony and actually hanging on the iron bars which separate the booth from the balcony proper.

Plunkett said yesterday that in all of his 20 years' experience in the theater business he had never seen anything like it. At 11 o'clock on Sunday night when the last performance was over, the theater was filled to capacity and lots of those who couldn't get in wandered whether the sale of tickets was stopped. The show starts at 10:30 in the morning at the Strand and the box-office is open at 11 at night.

Record Price for Stage Play

Metro Buys "Turn to the Right" for $250,000—Winchell Smith to Direct It—Hint at Permanent Tie-up Between Company and Theatrical Producers

Metro has purchased "Turn to the Right" for $250,000, a record price for screen rights. The nearest approach to it is the figure paid for "Way Down East" by David W. Griffith, who bought the play for $175,000 from William A. Brady.

It is understood that negotiations of various sorts for the play, which was written by Winchell Smith and Jack Hazzard, have been in progress by producers for two years. The picture will be produced and distributed through Metro and will be presented by John Golden and Marcus Loew. Under the terms of the contract, John Golden retains half interest in the play.

Winchell Smith will personally supervise the making of the picture. It will be made both in the east and in the west. Scenes for the well known peach orchard scenes will be shot on the

The nearest approach to $250,000 mark set by the purchase of "Turn to the Right" by Metro was the acquisition of "Way Down East" by D. W. Griffith for $175,000.

Other noteworthy transactions, as recalled by well known film men yesterday, are as follows:

made an offer to put up $100,000 as a guarantee on each of the plays and volunteered to have Winchell Smith as director. Smith and Golden were to receive 50% of the earnings derived from the sale of the pictures.

The offer was turned down. Later on I learned that an offer of $250,000 had been made for the screen rights to 'Turn to the Right.'

It was the original intention of Fairbanks to make this picture in France, in the original locale of the Dumas story. That plan has been abandoned and the entire picture will be made in this country. Hiram Abrams stated yesterday afternoon that the production will be made in a lavish manner and that a considerable sum of money will be spent on it.

A French producing company is making a version of the same story at this time. A number of prominent French artists have been engaged for the picture, which is being made as Fairbanks had planned to make it, in the actual locations in France.

It developed yesterday that Edward Knobloch's relations with Famous Players had been terminated with the delivery of several original stories by the famous Englishman. He was engaged to prepare a limited number of scripts for the screen.

St. Louis—The City Plan Commission has declined to entertain a proposition from William H. Green, an architect, to change the zone law to permit the erection of a 20-story film exchange building on the triangular strip of ground at the intersection of Channing, Olive Sts. and Lindell Blvd.

It is reported that Skouras Bros. will take over the New Capitol theater, Sixth and Chestnut Sts., now nearing completion. No definite announcement has been made.

The Missouri is to have a new pipe organ costing $70,000. The installation will require the enlargement and rebuilding of the stage and side walls. The organ will be installed by March 1. Louis Flint will continue as organist.
Two Circuits Planned

Both to Be Operated on Standardized Basis—Parent Companies Highly Capitalized—Stock Issues to Be floated to Cover Activities

Two big theater circuits, both national in scope, are planned by two separate companies. Curiously enough, both units plan to operate the proposed theaters on a standardized basis, although as far as could be learned yesterday, the companies have absolutely no connection. Stock issues will be floated.

One unit is the Peoples Theaters, Inc., a $25,000,000 company formed in Delaware, and the other the New Superior Prod, Inc., also a Delaware corporation, with a capitalization of $1,250,000.

He said that persons who did business with him before have ceased since Mayer's false statements were made.

Robert's Handling Short Reels

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Los Angeles—H. J. Roberts, general manager of Special Pictures Corp., has formed a company to distribute films on the west coast rights market. The new company is to be known as the H. J. Roberts Enterprises, Inc., and will handle comedies, scenarios, cartoons, westes and the Handschuiegl art color process.

A man is judged by his associates. So is a photo-play. When it is associated with a RITCHEY poster, the public judge it to be well worth seeing.
Peoples Theaters

houses on a standardized basis and where options cannot be secured on existing theaters, playhouses will be constructed.

The company is a $25,000,000 corporation, formed in Delaware. It is planned to offer stock to the townspeople in the form of preferred stock for its theaters. Of the total capitalization $12,500,000 is in 8% cumulative preferred stock at $10 a share and $12,500,000 in common at $5 a share.

Edward J. Donnell, who has been in the field for various companies for some years past, is president of the Twentieth Century Finance Co., a new unit formed to underwrite the stock issue of Peoples Theaters, and H. M. Amschel, well known in the Middle West, has been working on this plan for a theater circuit for many months.

To handle the first company plans to operate its theaters and upon what facts it bases its calculations:

The entire string of houses will be in the same architecture throughout. Each house will have a seating capacity of from 750 to 1,000. Each house will be built on a cost under a plan at cost of $50,000.

This is to include ground, equipment, machines, etc. It is figured that at least 25% will be saved in operating costs over what is spent now by the same type of house.

Each theater building will contain two small stores 12 by 15 ft. in size. It is estimated at least $70 for each theater will be derived in this manner.

For 1,000 houses the total will be $70,000 per month and $840,000 per year.

Each theater will be operated at an expense of $500 a month or a total of $500,000 a year, the entire string. Then figuring on a 15 cent admission basis and 750 paid admissions a day the total revenue per theaters would be about $675,000.

Since operating costs will be $500,000, a profit of $175,000 will be left per week, according to the company's calculations. This means an annual profit of $9,100,000, plus the $840,000 derived from rents of the stores, equals a total annual profit of $9,940,000.

The stock is being offered at $15 per unit, the unit to be composed of preferred and one and two common.

The Coal and Iron National Bank of New York has been made the depository. Dividends will be paid on the first day of January, April, July and October.

Think This Over
The Strand seats about 3,000, and the Capitol, generally spoken of as seating 5,000.

Eight shows daily are being given at the Strand for "The Kid." Figuring on a conservative basis, six shows a day, the present volume of business upholds the Strand will gross between $80,000 and $100,000 for the week.

"Passion" at the Capitol did approximately $55,000 the first week of its run and that theater houses about 1,500 more than the Strand.

It was stated yesterday that Manager Joe Plunkett was taking a few days rest.

No Statement
The New York Times yesterday published a special cable dispatch from Paris regarding the affairs of the American Cinematograph Corp., the $100,000,000 Delaware corporation in which Andre Himmel is the prime spirit.

The cable brought forth no comment from the offices of the Fleischmann Construction Co., which is interested in the company or from Andre Himmel, who in the past has been making whatever statements he had to make to the formative offices.

The cable said, in part, "Once more 'Ailaffair Himmel' is receiving some attention at the French press. Since the time some months ago when the Matin began an inquiry into the reality of the backings which Andre Himmel, a young Frenchman, asserted that he had in America, where he was trying to form a syndicate with a capital of 1,500,000 francs to control the whole film industry, little has been heard of the young man's scheme. It was solemnly renounced with bell, book and candle by the French cinematograph societies, a one by one those who in America had given consideration to his propositions have resigned their connections.

The latest to do so is McDougall Hawkes, who is just now in Paris. Here he has been busied himself with the examination of Himmel's propositions. He declares: "I have completed my inquiry, and I have decided. I have given my resignation to Andre Himmel publicly and have made common with Himmel's enterprise, in which I worked mainly because I believed it was in interest of France."

"The Main commenting on Hawkes' declaration says, "The only patriot of 'Ailaffair Himmel' now left in New York is Maurice Casenave, a personal friend of Andre Tardieu, and High Commissioner of France."

C. C. Rejects First National's Request for Higher Rentals on "The Kid"

The Theater Owners Chamber of Commerce, through a special committee composed of William Brandt, Louis Loew, B. S. Moss, William John Manheimer and Charles Henry, has rejected First National's offer for the raising of existing rental rates on the Chaplin series in a number of new states at higher rentals. It is understood that the committee's recommendations were forwarded yesterday by Ralph H. Clark, general manager to the First National Exchange, Inc., office of New York, and J. D. Williams at home office of the organization.

Big Deal On?
New Ass. Exhibitors Unit Formed in Delaware—Big Deal Reported Under Way

Word was received in New York yesterday from Dover, Del., of the incorporation of a company called Associated Exhibitors, Inc., with a capitalization of $3,100,000. The incorporators were given as Arthur W. Britton, Samuel B. Howard and George V. Reilly of New York.

At the office of Associated Exhibitors, Inc., the Pathe exhibitor of cooperative movement, Phil Ryan, general manager, refused to comment in any way on the new incorporation. He referred all queries to the office of Paul Brunet, where it was stated there was nothing to say about the Delaware company.

It is learned, however, that there is some sort of an important deal under way. Just what turn it will take and when it could not be learned yesterday. Definite announcement may be expected in a short time.

Assets 50 Million
A financial report of Loew's, Inc., covering activities of that company from Oct. 19, 1919, to Aug. 31, 1920, shows a net profit of $2,868,360.37, after Federal taxes are removed. The assets are $30,169,551.71.

The statement as of Aug. 31, 1920, shows a gross income of $21,660,372.53, divided as follows: Theater box-office receipts and rentals of sales of films and advertising accessories, $20,123,931.3; booking fees and commissions, $1,536,192.5; interest and dividends, $4,834,244.36, and miscellaneous income, $4,834,237.3.

This leaves a consolidated profit of $4,075,481.33 from which production of $409,492.13 earned prior to the organization of Loew's, Inc., in turn, leaves a consolidated profit for Loew's, Inc., and affiliated companies of $3,499,989.20, from which $2,690,469.19 for Federal taxes is deducted. The net profit for the period from Oct. 19, 1919, to Aug. 31, 1920, is $2,868,360.37.

Pathe and Vitagraph Resign—Differ Over Policies—Sydney S. Cohen Charges Association With Attempt to Disrupt the M. P. T. O.

Pathe and Vitagraph have tendered their resignations as members of the National Association, because of differences of opinion between the companies and the association over the manner in which the latter organization is managing its affairs.

Another interesting development in the N. A. M. P. I. situation was the delivery yesterday afternoon, by special messenger, of a circular letter sent to every member of the association from the office of Sydney S. Cohen, president of the M. P. T. O. In this letter Cohen charged that "a deliberate attempt had been made to disrupt and destroy the M. P. T. O."

While no official announcement was made by the two companies, it was learned from other sources that both Pathe and Vitagraph are not at all in sympathy with the manner in which the Nat'l Ass'n is conducting business. (Continued on Page 3)
Wrangle Over Serial Rights

The publication of the proposed "Adventures of Tarzan" serial by P. P. Craft brought forth a letter from H. G. Kosch which said in part:

"I am the attorney and secretary of the Numa Pictures Corp., owners of the motion picture rights of Edgar Rice Burroughs' story, 'The Return of Tarzan.' I note in this morning's issue the announcement that a new Tarzan serial will be put out by P. P. Craft. This statement about Mr. Craft's new serial is absolutely without foundation. Mr. Craft disposed of all his rights absolutely to the Numa Pictures Corp. and is in no way connected with this corporation, or with any rights growing out of this book, nor did he in any manner retain any production rights.

"I wish to further advise you that the new serial now being made is being produced for the Numa Pictures Corp. by the Great Western Producing Co."

Regarding Kosch's statements Craft said:

"The only rights regarding Edgar Rice Burroughs that I conveyed to the Numa Pictures Corp. were the rights of the book entitled 'The Return of Tarzan,' from which story 'The Revenge of Tarzan' was made. They have no rights whatever to any other Tarzan story. My arrangement with Edgar Rice Burroughs gives me the rights to other stories and from one of these the serial 'The Adventures of Tarzan' will be made.

"I acquired my rights from Edgar Rice Burroughs direct and no other person or firm is competent to give any information regarding my deals with him."

its affairs, particularly where exhibitor organizations such as the M. T. O. enter. Vitagraph couldn’t be reached yesterday for a statement.

Cohen’s Stand

A deliberate attempt has been made to get and destroy the M. T. O. of America, an organization consisting of the majority of motion picture exhibitors and producers in the United States. This attempt was made in the name and by the authority of the National Association of the P. I. Industry, which, as you are aware, includes producers and distributors of motion pictures, and is part of the campaign against the M. T. O. of America, telegrams were sent to exhibitors in various parts of the country asking them to join the so-called ‘Bouton’ Division of the National Association. These telegrams were signed by Frederick H. Elliott, chairman of the National Association.

We have a letter sent by Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary of the National Association of the P. I. Industry, to an exhibitor in Indiana which plainly discloses Bryant’s purpose in starting on his tour. This letter was read at the meeting of the Illinois Exhibitors to-day. It was in the form of an addendum to the knowledge of the letter that he characterized as most damaging.

What we want to point out is that moment with all possible emphasis, is need of a declaration on your part as whether you were aware of the purposes which your signature and your name meant using. We think that the exhibitor of the country has the right to know sources from which this attack came, and want you to go on record either one or another. When we have established identity of the men behind this attack, it will not be difficult to expose their motives.

Frederick H. Elliott of the National Association could not be reached for statement. His office at one time answered he was in conference and that he had gone for the day.

Announcement

In order to meet a persistent demand from the industry in general, for his services as editor and writer of sub-titles, Ralph Spence has severed a four-years connection with William Fox. While available to all producers, Mr. Spence feels that, in justice to his work and in fairness to his clients, he must necessarily restrict the quantity of work accepted. Ralph Spence's word is personal—he has no assistant writers or cutters. His output is limited to his personal capacity; to operate otherwise would be to jeopardize the quality now found in “Spence Edited” pictures.

Mr. Spence has just completed the editing and titling of R. A. Walsh’s production of “The Oath,” one of First National’s “Big Five” features. Many orders were necessarily rejected during the editing of this subject. Those who require the services of Mr. Spence are requested to make appointments through Mr. Don Meaney, general manager, Bryant 2333. Appointments for projection-room inspections should be made a week in advance.

Stripped of all its splendor, lavish sets, and general atmosphere of the spectacular, “Lying Lips” would probably be called just a program picture because the story consists of just that sort of material. But “Lying Lips,” a Thomas Ince production, which Associated Producers will distribute, is far from a program picture, for it has been made into an elaborate spectacle and has that quality which appeals from the standpoint of production. It’s always good to look at.

Perhaps the best miniature work that has ever been done is seen in the picture. The vessel is seen plunging through the waves, and when it strikes a mine and blows up, the particles of debris are shown falling around the wreck. This has certainly been effectively executed.

Money has not been spared and there is, besides the sinking of the ship, another though different form of thrill, in the lavish party given by the rich man in honor of his bride-to-be. The beautiful ballroom scenes and the entertainment provided for the guests in the form of a pool with shapely bathing girls, are bound to have their own appeal. The direction is excellent, especially with regard to the handling of players. There are one or two small matters of detail which go a bit amiss, but they aren’t likely to be noticed by the average audience. House Peters is splendid in the role of the lover with Florence Vidor an attractive heroine. Joseph Kilgour is the suave, rich suitor.

Nance Abbott, an English girl, visits Canada for the purpose of getting away for a while from “Willie”
Chase, rich and twice her age, whom she is to marry.
In Canada, Nance falls in love with Blair Cornwall, a ranchman, but later when Blair discovers the engagement ring on Nance’s finger, she decides to go back to London, because she realizes she could not live the way Blair did. Blair sells his ranch and sails on the same vessel. The boat is wrecked and Nance and Blair are evidently the only survivors. Thinking they will die, they pronounce themselves man and wife “in the sight of God.” But later, when rescue is at hand, Nance again rebels and asks Blair not to let them find him with her.

The girl is saved and Blair apparently lost, but later he appears under the name of Charles Spence, now a rich man, but refuses to admit that he is Blair.
During the ceremony of her marriage to Chase, Nance is conscious stricken, and tells them she is another man’s wife. She later joins Blair on a steamer bound for Australia.

Should Prove A Good One For The Box Office

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Regardless of almost anything else “Lying Lips” is a good box office picture, and after all that’s all the exhibitor cares about. It has a good drawing title and a cast and production that will meet any promises you make about it. Play up the shipwreck thrill.
There’s always a goodly crowd who go in for thrills like this. Announce it as Thomas H. Ince’s first production, made especially for Associated Producers.

It is a big picture because of the way it has been done, and you should be able to cash in on an extended run. The fact that the story isn’t new isn’t going to matter very much, since they will be interested in the production. Stills in your lobby will attract and catchlines can be used. The names of Florence Vidor and House Peters are the best known of the players, so use their names if you care to.

CHARACTER OF STORY...... Member of Royal

love with sister and resigns rather than arrest the brother
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .... 5,626 feet

Bill Hart is like the old family physician—you have great faith in what he prescribes. And you can always deck on him. Again, in “O’MALLEY OF THE MOUNTED.” Bill provides himself with a good live role and while he is a member of the Mounted Police, it is only at the opening and close of the picture that he wears the uniform, so that even this doesn’t take him away from the usual rough-and-ready togs of the westerner. Besides some fine action, a great fist fight and rodeo sequence, there is a genuine sympathetic twist toward the close, when the officer returns to hand in his resignation rather than arrest the brother of the girl he loves.

Of course, there is always a certain amount of good riding expected in Hart’s pictures, so he doesn’t disappoint you in this, and besides some fast riding, there is a long sequence showing a rodeo and it isn’t any small affair, just “staged” for the picture. At least it doesn’t look it. They must have come upon a real one and there are some real broncho riders par-cipating.

The star’s co-workers, Lambert Hillyer and Joe August, contribute their own share of effort of the usual pleasure of Hart’s picture and the direction and camerawork are very good. The lightings, especially night scenes, seem a bit dark at times but this may be due to the fact that the tinting is a bit too dark.

O’Malley’s job, was to get Bud Lanier, wanted for murder. Disguised as a cowboy O’Malley starts out, determined to “get his man.” He attends a rodeo at Fork City, where Bud Lanier is one of the contestants.
O’Malley had never seen Bud, but instinct tells him Bud is his man. Later, by means of intrigue, O’Malley becomes a member of Bud’s gang where he meets Rose, Bud’s sister, and after the Mounted has given her unwelcome suitor a good beating, the girl tells him how she and her brother are hiding from the Mounted police because Bud had killed a man who had insulted her.

Later O’Malley is accused by the leader of the gang of tipping off a bank robbery, and for this he is sentenced to be hanged. Bud and Rose managed his escape, and during the night while the three are camping, O’Malley leaves a note telling who he is, saying that he is on his way to resign, but will return for Rose if she will wait for him.

You Can Make Promises Along the Lines Of His Past Pictures

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

It’s hardly necessary to give any pointers on how to put over a Bill Hart picture. He’s liked everywhere, and all you have to do is mention his name.
You can tell them that the star also wrote this one.
If they liked his last story “The Testing Block,” they will surely like this one. You can tell them that in this, he plays the part of a member of the Royal Mounted Police. The story hasn’t any surprise but that doesn’t matter. The star’s work and a good production is all they want.

Among the things you can promise are the Mounted robbing a bank in order to become a member of a crook gang, the rodeo meet, another real Bill Hart fist fight, O’Malley lassoing an enemy on horseback, and plenty of other typical Hart punchers. Catchlines can be used, but they shouldn’t be required.

Gentlemen:

Your "Black Beauty" special is a dandy. It smashed all attendance and money records at the Capitol Theatre. More people saw it than any picture ever shown in this Theatre, and I have heard more favorable comment on it than on any ten others I ever booked. Every performance packed to capacity, and our special children's matinee proved the biggest kind of a success.

On Wednesday we played to over four thousand children. The letters I sent to school teachers made every teacher in town a booster, and the talk the kiddies made brought in their parents who enjoyed "Black Beauty" as well as the children. The letters proved the most effective bit of advertising I ever did.

It was this double-barreled idea that put the whole thing over 100 per cent--it got my regular theatregoers in and pleased them, and in addition drew thousands of persons who rarely go to see a motion picture at all. The Capitol Theatre has an unusually spacious lobby, but in holding out the crowds at the special matinee, I had to open the side door into the alley, or there wouldn't have been room enough.

"Black Beauty" is a great picture and one that has an appeal for all persons, from six to sixty. No picture I ever played has approached this one in drawing the crowds, getting the money and generating real satisfaction. It was a pleasure to have been able to offer this to my patrons.

Very truly yours,

CAPITOL THEATRE,

DIRECTION .......................... Good
PHOTOGRAPHY ........................ All right
LIGHTINGS .......................... Satisfactory

DETAIL ................................. Adequate

CHARACTER OF STORY..... Foreman of ranch in love with owner's daughter, is accused of stealing and kidnapping girl but proves his innocence

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION..... About 4,800 feet

"Hearts O' the Range," is a first rate western and one of the best of its kind on this market right now. The story starts off in sort of narrative form, and while it takes a little time to get started, works up considerable interest and there is a splendid climax, in which the suspense is well maintained and is the kind that keeps them on edges, although they're sure the hero and heroine will be rescued before the fatal moment.

The director has worked this bit up very well, and deserves credit for knowing when he reached the end without stringing on some additional footage. Once the climax is reached and the hero's innocence is proven, it's over. So often it happens that the director keeps it going a while longer and spoils the effect of a good climax.

A fine western atmosphere has been obtained and there are many pretty shots of country. It's a real out-of-doors picture, there being only one interior scene in the entire picture. There is no one especially well known among the players except perhaps, Milburn Morante, who is fairly well known for his western pictures. He appears in the cast and also directed the picture. Alma Rayford is a pleasing heroine and others who play cowboys are Harry Delmore, Charles Everett and Alfred Hewston. There are more whose names are not given.

Squaredeal, so-called for its manner of fair play, is the owner of a large cattle ranch. He has a pretty daughter and when a good looking foreman is put in charge, it's quite natural that the daughter "falls" for him. After the arrival of Beldon, the new foreman, the cattle ceased to disappear and everything goes along smoothly on the ranch for some time. Beldon recognizes among the men under his supervision, Cole, former manager of the Bar X ranch, and a thief. Beldon catches Cole annoying a woman servant and knocks him down. Cole swears revenge.

Squaredeal intrusts a large sum of money to Beldon, telling him to take it to the bank next morning. Cole overhears the conversation and the next day overtakes Beldon and demands the money. The girl is riding with Beldon and the two are taken to Cole's shack, where the latter threatens to brand the girl unless Beldon hands over the money. In the meantime, a note left by Cole, leads Squaredeal to believe that the foreman has gone off with the money and his daughter, whereupon, they start out in search of him. Beldon frees himself and later in a fight throws Cole from a cliff. Explanations follow and Squaredeal regrets misjudging his son-in-law to-be.

You Can Promise Them A Real Western. They Ought to Like It

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

If you're looking for a thoroughly satisfactory five reel western you can book "Hearts O' the Range," and feel assured your folks will like it. You can promise them real western atmosphere, cowboys, cattle ranches, rustlers and a romance besides, that will please them. You can't very well work with names so use catchlines: "How would you like to love a girl and after putting up a fight to save her from being branded, have her father hand you a 'wallop.' That's what happens in 'Hearts O' the Range.' But it was all a mistake. Go to the blank theater and see what happens after father discovered his error."

With regard to promises you can tell them they'll see some interesting scenes on a cattle ranch, one thrilling fist fight on a cliff, and a climax that will keep them in suspense for a while. The title may interest them, but catchlines worked with it will make it more attractive.
Production Is Good and Star Is Pleasing as Oriental Maid

Shirley Mason in WING TOY

DIRECTOR .................... Howard M. Mitchell
AUTHOR ....................... Pearl Doles Bell
SCENARIO BY ................... Thomas Dixon, Jr.
CAMERAMAN .................... Glenn MacWilliams

AS A WHOLE.....Well made with effective Chinese atmosphere; one angle that the censors will be after

STORY......Gives star rather distinctive role which she handles well

DIRECTION ................. Very good
PHOTOGRAPHY ................ Good
LIGHTINGS ................... Satisfactory
CAMERA WORK ................ Average
STAR ......................... Pleasing as usual

SUPPORT......Edward McWade and Harry S. Northrup do exceptionally good work in Chinese parts

EXTERIORS ................. Few but they are good
INTERIORS .................... Correct

DETAIL ....................... Good

CHARACTER OF STORY.......Princess of Chinatown turns out to be daughter of District Attorney, kidnapped in infancy

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 5,000 feet

It is quite possible that Pearl Doles Bell got the idea for her “Wing Toy” from Leonor Ulric’s last play “The Son-Daughter” in which Miss Ulric played the part of a young Chinese maiden, Ming Toy. However, Miss Bell, has made her heroine a white girl, a fact that is disclosed just about the time you’re beginning to think Miss Mason’s makeup is very poor if she is really meant to be a Chinese girl.

The story will certainly interest anyone who cares for Oriental atmosphere. And there is a goodly majority who enjoy this type of picture. A splendidly accurate Chinese atmosphere has been obtained and the direction is very good. Also there is really nothing very objectional although there is one sequence which is liable to give some of the censor boards something to do. Yen Low, the leader of the Chinese district and all powerful, has a white wife and a flashback shows how he got her.

Harry Northrup as Yen Low does some splendid character acting as does Edward McWade as Wong, a laundryman. The settings are all very realistic and those of the palatial home of Yen Low are attractive. One gambling den set is quite typical. The story provides Shirley Mason with a part a good deal different from anything she has had of late. She seems very fortunate in securing stories containing roles that give her a fine variation.

“The Mole” a crook, has left a baby with Wong, the laundryman, and then disappeared. The kindly Wong reared the babe until she was a girl of eight years and then he took her to the powerful Yen Low who agreed to take care of her but after the agreement had been signed, told Wong he intended making her his wife when she was sixteen. When Wing Toy was nearly sixteen, Wong told her the story of her life and how she would be forced to marry Yen Low, when he had divorced his white wife, Lily.

Bob, a cub reporter, was greatly interested in “The Princess of Chinatown,” as Wing Toy was called. On the eve of Wing Toy’s marriage, “The Mole” was released from a long prison term. His first act was to call the District Attorney and in a moment of bravado he told the Attorney, that it was he who had kidnapped his daughter because the Attorney was “sending him up,” and that she was about to be married to Yen Low, proprietor of a notorious gambling den.

The District Attorney and his men raided Yen Low’s place. Yen Low had word of the coming raid and the marriage ceremony was nearly over when Lily shot her husband and the raiders did the rest. Bob wrote his first story and it concluded with his marriage to Wing.

If They Like Chinese Atmosphere at all They’ll Like This

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

From the title you can judge what the picture is like. At least you expect Oriental atmosphere. You get it and it’s realistic and gives the star a chance to do something different than anything she had done heretofore. Besides using the title, exploitation angles should suggest themselves without difficulty. You might secure a couple of little Chinese maidens to distribute miniature Wing Toy buddas or if you don’t care to incur any expense, literature and catchlines should prove equally effective.

Show stills of Shirley in her Chines costume. Perhaps those who saw Leonore Ulric in “The Son Daughter” have often wished it might be done in pictures. “Wing Toy” isn’t as good a story dramatically but you can promise them something like it. You may be sure to please Shirley Mason “fans” with this.

PHOTOGRAPHY .................. Fair

INTERIORS ..................... Too much sameness
DETAIL ......................... Fair
CHARACTER OF STORY...... Man's sweetheart saves him from prison and solves double murder mystery

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION...... About 5,800 feet

For those who like melodrama of the murder mystery type "The Way Women Love" should do more than satisfy them for there is not only one but two mysterious murders and the more they try to solve it, the more it becomes a riddle. The director has managed to maintain a splendid atmosphere of suspense which is coherent most of the time although there are several times when he gets a bit confused. However, it isn't likely that the casual observer will be annoyed by this as much as they are prepared to be bewildered. The conclusion is never obvious until the very ending and for this much at least, he deserves credit.

Of course the picture is the sort that appeals more particularly to the patrons of downtown houses for the mere aspect of murder and the more or less gruesome environment which accompanies it can't be said to appeal to the finer senses. The titles aim to add a melodramatic air by the use of dots and dashes. This cheapens any picture.

Rubye De Remer handles the part of the loyal sweetheart very well, but somehow or other she doesn't appear as attractive as usual, probably due to the fact that she has not been well lighted and the photography is not the best. The lightings seemed to have the "flickers" occasionally. Walter Miller and the remainder of the cast are adequate.

Ralph Barr refuses to grant a further loan to Train who has been rejected by Judith Renyard, now engaged to Barr. Train publicly insults Judith for which Barr openly threatens to shoot him on sight. Train appears at Barr's home and says that he will kill himself in Barr's home and makes it appear that he was murdered by Barr unless the latter agrees to lend him the money.

Apparently Train does kill himself and Barr is suspected of the murder, but suddenly disappears. Then there follows a series of complications which make the solving of the murder more difficult. First it appears that Barr did kill Train but later it develops he was killed by a shot from behind the portiers. There is also another murder and much more mystery until it turns out that Barr is not guilty and Judith's loyalty really saves him.

Better See This and Judge For Yourself

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The most important thing that can be said for "The Way Women Love" is that it is a first rate mystery picture with considerable melodramatic action, fine suspense and is fairly easy to follow. That should be sufficient. You know the taste of your clientele and should book accordingly. If they want mystery drama they will be well satisfied. If they don't, they won't like it. At any rate make known the type of story and let them be the judge if you show it.

The censor boards may give you some bother if you show it so you had better settle yourself with them before you show it, especially if you're in a town where they're "on the job." Use the star's name, and promise them they'll like her work. It seems to be the sort of picture that ought to make a good deal of money on its own particular market.

CHARACTER OF STORY......One twin brother goes to prison for crime of the other, who repents and takes his place
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ........ 5,100 feet

Stoll offers as its seventh release, an adaptation of Rita's novel of English middle class life, "The Iron Stair." The transfer to the screen isn't wholly satisfying from the spectator's standpoint, and the picture as a whole provides only average entertainment. One reason is that the story seems at the outset to suggest a lot more possibilities than have been taken advantage of, with the result that audiences, on an average, will anticipate bigger developments than those which occur. It would have been well to take a few more liberties with the original in spots where screen opportunities were apparent.

The direction is good, with the exception of the slow start, and one unexplained incident. The latter becomes important from the fact that the whole demenent hinges on it. A check written by the hero's enemy is shown in the enemy's hands one moment, and by some unknown means it comes into possession of the hero's family, where the villainous brother raises the amount. Some confusion is caused by the failure to explain this sequence. The leading male character plays a dual role, and the double exposure stuff has been very well done. He could have handled the part much better by a little repression. In his efforts to contrast the characters of the two brothers, one a sneaking, despicable man, with the outward appearance of a holy clerical student; and the other a riotous drunkard who is good as heart, he frequently overacts. Madge Stuart hasn't an awful lot to do, but her work is finished and smooth, and altogether pleasing.

The story is of two twin brothers, one an outwardly appearing holy clerical student, who is in reality a sneak, and the other a rather wild, but good principled young man. To win the heroine, the villainous brother forges a check and the blame falls on the hero who is imprisoned. The evil brother is overcome by remorse and finally, after substituting himself for his brother, he ends his own life, leaving the hero and heroine in happiness.

Talk About the Story, But Be Careful of Promises
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

About your only point of strong appeal in this, lies in the unusual character of the story. If you have played "Mr. Wu" or "The Lure of Crooking Water" you cannot, without danger of disappointing, promise as good a Stoll picture this time, so it will be well to confine yourself as nearly as possible to the appeal of the theme itself. Make an especial point of the substitution of one brother for the other, in prison, and promise a surprising finish to a situation that you can make appear hopelessly tangled.

You haven't any names in the cast well enough known to count for much in advertising, but the title offers possibilities, as does the author, Rita. Be sure to tell them that the picture is an adaptation of her novel, "The Iron Stair."

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ......... 5,893 feet

Edward Jose, has made of "What Women Will Do," the sort of picture that you can run and feel pretty confident that the majority of your patrons are being entertained, whatever class of people make up your audiences. There isn't any one outstanding feature to account, especially for it's enjoyment either, but probably the things most responsible are the general appeal of a good "crook" story, the points in which this one differs from a lot of others of the same general type, and the appearance and performance of Anna Q. Nilsson.

Miss Nilsson not only displays a charming personality, but does some really good acting. As a crook girl, whose god is money, she delicately handles the change in character which is brought about through the influence of a good woman. The general idea of crooks reforming through good influences is of "The Miracle Man" type, but this one is sufficiently different that the similarity doesn't suggest itself. Although Miss Nilsson's work features the picture, there is credit due the whole cast for satisfactory performances. Allan Forrest, Earl Metcalfe, George Majeroni, and Jane Jennings handle the principal roles.

The story's punch gets it's start in the first hundred feet, in a way that grabs the attention rather startlingly, and holds it through the spectator's desire to link up the incident with the rest of the picture. The incident is the murder of a young man in a gambling resort by the villainous Dr. Joe. The blame is placed on another young man, and then the whole thing is apparently dropped for almost the entire length of the picture. While it keeps the audience wondering, it may also have a confusing effect on the rest of the story, until Dr. Joe is again introduced, and the connection established.

Nevertheless, when it is explained, it makes the climax very effective, and produces the necessary suspense throughout the last two reels. This suspense has been heightened too, by careful direction, especially in connection with preparations for a horse race on which the denouement hinges.

Talk About the Crook Story and Say It's Different

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

In this picture, you have the type of story whose appeal is large, and one which you can promise will entertain, with the assurance that it will back you up. Makes the biggest points in your advertising the fact that it is a crook story, and that it is different in numbers of ways from other crook pictures. Talk about the plot of the "gang," to swindle the old lady by means of fake spiritualism, and make features of the framed up horse race, the supposed drowning of the heroine, and of the murder which starts off the action.

Then tell about the work of Anna Q. Nilsson. Her name will mean something to a lot of patrons, and you can promise a mighty good performance in this picture. Assure them that there is plenty of excitement and suspense, and tell them there are two surprises in store for them at the climax. The title offers a number of possibilities for ballyhoos and catchlines.

player, and a realistic and beautiful Kentucky atmosphere are the points of appeal that stand out most prominently in Charles Maigne's production of "The Kentuckians" from John Fox's well known novel. But it isn't the sort of story that can be said to have a universal appeal because everyone isn't interested in whether or not Kentucky mountaineers still continue their feudal troubles with the aristocrats or not.

Director Maigne has succeeded in the main in making the atmosphere realistic and in handling the players he has done well but whether he worked with a poorly prepared scenario or whether he just didn't "hit" it right, there are dull moments in "The Kentuckians" and it takes sometime before the spectator can "find" himself. This is due to the fact that in the opening of the picture there are more titles than scenes and they depend almost entirely on the captions to tell the story.

Monte Blue's performance is well worth seeing and when he is not on the screen his presence is missed.
Wilfred Lytell hasn't an altogether attractive role and he often appears to be ill at ease. Diana Allen is a pleasing heroine and there are some splendid mountaineer types. The camerawork and photography generally deserves mention for it's excellence.

Boone Stallard (Monte Blue) goes to the Kentucky Legislature to plead emancipation for his people in the mountains. He meets his first opposition in the person of Randolph Marshall, an aristocrat. Stallard's plea is so sincere that he gains the admiration of the members and later is invited to a reception at the Governor's home. Anne, the Governor's daughter, who secretly admires the young mountaineer for his sincerity introduces him to her fiancé, Marshall, but the mountaineer refuses to shake hands.

Matters grow worse and Boone and Marshall decide to settle the dispute by duel but each escapes a disastrous end and they shake hands. At this time Boone is informed that the Keatons, another clan, have broken truce with the Stallards and he returns to fight for his own honor. Boone talks them into law and order and through his influence gains the respect of the aristocrats. Boone is really in love with Anne but realizes the difference in their places in life and the story closes with Randolph winning the girl.

You Can Most Likely Please The Majority With It
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You can probably satisfy the majority with "The Kentuckians" regardless of whether or not they will all like the story. To some it won't make much difference because they will be pleased with the performance of Monte Blue and the picture is always good to look at. You can promise them real Kentucky atmosphere. Make good use of the featured player's name. His work deserves it and you can recall his work in "The Jucklins" if you played that picture.

Use the author's name if you think that will interest them. And if they recall producers' names in connection with previous productions you can tell them
"The Kentuckians" was made by Charles Maigne who directed Barrymore's "The Copperhead." This line might attract: "Would you aid the law in sending your own brother to death even though you knew him to be guilty? It happens in 'The Kentuckians.'"

Viola Dana is seen in an adaptation of F. Scott Fitzgerald's Saturday Evening Post story "The Offshore Pirate." The star's delightful personality, her cute comedienne tricks, together with six colored jazz boys and some pretty backgrounds afford an amusing picture which while it offers a satisfactory bit of diversion and is clean comedy stuff, would have been still more pleasing and entertaining if they had made a five reeler of it.

Metro productions are all six reels or just lacking a couple of hundred feet of six reels. In this connection, several of the pictures released lately by this organization have lost some of their drawing power and entertainment value through the fact that the stories have been dragged out to six reels when they would have done much better in five. That is particularly the case with "The Offshore Pirate." There isn't enough in the plot to keep it going over five thousand feet.

The settings are very attractive. Most of the action takes place aboard a good looking yacht. Jack Mulhall is the handsome hero who is ably assisted in his scheme to win the heart of the millionaires by six young colored fellows, the antics of whom audiences will enjoy and who seemed to enjoy themselves in their part of the picture.

Ardita Farnam, possessor of beauty and millions, had a will of her own, besides a yacht and an uncle. Ardita decided to marry a foreigner—the reason, she wanted a man with a past rather than a future. Alone on her yacht one evening at sundown Ardita heard jazz melodies come floating over the waves. A good looking young fellow and six colored musicians came aboard the yacht and advised Ardita that in the afternoon they had been playing at a charity performance and at the end of their number they had relieved the audience of all its valuables and intended using her yacht to escape.

They go to sea. Later the leader, who calls himself Curtis Carlyle, is put off the boat. Then Ardita feels sorry and goes after him. The uncle arrives and Curtis explains that he is Toby Moreland, whom Ardita's uncle wanted her to meet. She knew it all the time and decides to marry him.

You will find this a clean piece of entertainment with some amusing situations and other points of appeal as outlined above. Those who like the star will be thoroughly satisfied with "The Offshore Pirate," and after some cutting, it will make a first rate picture for any audience. You can tell them it's a Saturday Evening Post story.

Stills in your lobby should attract attention. You could use one showing the six colored jazz boys and promise they'll keep them amused. Other stills will attract because of the settings. Catchlines could read: "Come to the blank theater and enjoy a cruise with 'The Offshore Pirate.'" Or, "She wouldn't listen to sense so they tricked her into it. See Viola Dana in her lastest Metro picture."

"THE BIG PUNCH"

Fox

DIRECTOR ....................... Jack Ford AUTHOR ........................ Jules G. Furthman
SCENARIO BY .................. Jules G. Furthman
CAMERAMAN .................... Frank Good
AS A WHOLE ...... Slow moving at times and again has some good live moments; not exactly the best they could do for star

STORY ...... Hasn't unusual appeal but will probably go for ordinary program offering DIRECTION ...... Sequences a bit choppy, otherwise good

PHOTOGRAPHY .................. Fair
LIGHTINGS ........................ Fair
CAMERA WORK .................. Average
STAR .................. Not convincing as minister

SUPPORT ...... Rough western types good; Barbara Bedford pleasing heroine and Jennie Lee real mother

EXTERIORS ...... Several pretty western long shots

INTERIORS .................... All right

DETAIL .................. Adequate

CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Innocent young westerner sent to prison and later ridiculed because he enters ministry

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... About 5,600 feet

Buck Jones tries something new in his latest "The Big Punch." He becomes a minister in the latter reels but he isn't suited to anything like this, and when he appears with a roman collar and a pinch-back suit, he cuts an odd looking figure and even his expression of reverence doesn't convince. The early reels are, however, much better and the best thing in the picture. There is some good western fight stuff and riding which will satisfy admirers of this type of production.

But Star Has Had Better Stories

The star has a really delightful personality but he is best suited to either straight romance with western settings or stories which give him genuine hero parts. They manage to get a bit of mother love atmosphere in "The Big Punch" and this may please although it isn't made the dominant feature of the story. There is also a romantic twist that might have been made more of. It doesn't come in for much prominence until the end when, as a minister, he rescues a Salvation Army lass from an unscrupulous dance hall owner.

Some pretty western country makes an appropriate background for the picture and there are several very beautiful long shots. Barbara Bedford is a pleasing young lady who hasn't a great deal to do as the heroine." Jennie Lee is a real motherly looking person. All the western types are good. Among the others in the cast are George Siegmann, Jack Curtis, Jack McDonald, Al Fremont, Edgar Jones, Irene Hunt and Eleanor Gilmore.

Buck finally consents to study for the ministry but before going away tries to persuade his worthless brother Jed to sober up and stay at home with the mother during Buck's absence. On the eve of his going Buck is implicated in a murder committed by Jed and his gang. Buck serves two years and upon his release studies for the ministry before he returns to his mother.

But the people ridicule Buck and laugh at the "jailbird minister," as they call him. During one of Buck's services, his brother and two pals enter the church to hide from the prison officials who are after them. Buck shields them and later they come to his aid when McGraw, the owner of the dance hall, has lured the Salvation Army girl to his room and Buck is forced to fight the whole gang. A girl who believes McGraw is "throwing her over" tells that McGraw "framed" the murder charge on Jed and his pals. This gives the men their right to freedom and clears Buck and leaves him to marry the Army girl.

If They Like Buck Jones They'll Be Satisfied

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The Fox cowboy hero has a large following because of his clean-cut appearance and pleasing personality. It probably won't make a great deal of difference whether he plays a minister or an outlaw. He has had much better roles than the one afforded in "The Big Punch," which incidentally is as good a title as any even though the picture might have been called "The Circuit Rider" because it has to do mostly with the hero becoming a circuit rider—a sort of traveling minister.

You can promise one or two thrills, but don't go at it very strong from this angle because there aren't enough to do much talking about. If you are in the habit of just announcing the star and the title of the picture and get them in with just this, so much the better. In case you want advance notices for your local newspapers the Fox press sheet contains all that you could require and also catchlines.

CHARACTER OF STORY...... Model who longs for adventure and clothes she can’t buy saves a prince from disgrace and wins an American husband
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .. 4,556 feet
Exhibitors who book “Silk Hosiery” can at least feel assured that they are showing a picture which will satisfy the majority but will appeal more strongly to the women because it is really a woman’s picture although the title is liable to interest the men. But they’re due for a bit of a disappointment, because “Silk Hosiery” is not given any more prominence than silk dresses for that matter.

Frank Dazey’s story is really too weak for a feature but Ince has managed to make it hold together fairly well by the use of attractive settings, a fashion show and some other good bits. These help considerably to cover up the shortcomings of the story which doesn’t contain anything new. It’s all been done before—the pretty model who couldn’t afford to own the pretty gown she wore but of course she finally wins a husband and is on the road to having the things she wants most when they reach “The End.”

Just for a change the director has a real scrap between the star and another woman player. This is somewhat out of the ordinary. It’s usually a fast fight between two men. It’s good while it lasts but they don’t show much of it and it couldn’t have been very rough because the ladies don’t even tear their gowns. There are a few fairly good humorous situations that register well.

Marjorie Brown is a model who longs for romance and adventure of the story book variety but she never gets any further than displaying beautiful gowns in an ultrafashionable shop. Every customer who comes in is ordering a new gown for the ball to be given in honor of some Prince. Yvette, a French woman, comes to order a gown and with her is Sir Leeds, her fiancé, who immediately attracts Marjorie’s attention but she loses hope when he hears he is engaged.

Marjorie stays alone in the shop to deliver the gown to Yvette and dresses herself in the costume. Some crook business follows in which Yvette and an idler named Cad Jones are implicated. It isn’t at all clear, but Marjorie gets mixed up in it someway, is kidnapped and locked in a room with Leeds who sort of explains matters to her. They escape and Marjorie makes a big hit with the Prince when she recovers a note and a piece of jewelry which the Prince had once indiscreetly given to a New York society woman and which he fears she will use against him. Leeds turns out to be a detective. He asks Marjorie to marry him.

Don’t Make Promises and They’ll Have No Comeback

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Enid Bennett is pleasing enough herself to make up for a whole lot that the story and the production given it fail to supply, so if you can rely on her to put it over for you, you can book “Silk Hosiery.” Whether or not the theater where the feature was shown cut something out to make it fit the program or not isn’t known but at any rate there is no special attention given to “Silk Hosiery,” not even a close-up, so the title is deceiving.

You can use a fashion show in connection with the showing if you are in the habit of doing such things but the picture isn’t really strong enough to warrant any extra expense so it would be better to try and put it over on the strength of the star’s name. You might persuade the editor of your home newspaper to allow you a cut on the woman’s page. It will get the women interested.

Jack Pickford in
"JUST OUT OF COLLEGE"
Goldwyn

DAILY

Hasn’t the great lose
All he’s satisfied.

DAILY

Bingos ads to hand the advertising end of it, and the way in which Bingo Pickles advertisements greet the eyes of the owner of Pickering pickles every move he makes are all amusing.

Jack Pickford is the central character, but the part isn’t really one that gives him very much to do. Molly Malone is a pleasing heroine. The direction for the most part is good. There is one angle of the story which might just have well been omitted. It deals with the heroine’s mother and her psychological tendencies.

Ed Swinger (Jack Pickford) is just out of college, but wants to marry Caroline Pickering, daughter of Septimus Pickering; famous for his pickles. Septimus favors Ed as a husband for Caroline in preference to the mother’s choice and so he gives Ed $20,000 with the understanding that he can marry Caroline if he doubles the money in thirty days. Pickering’s secretary sells Ed some bogs oil stock and relieves him of $15,000, so Ed has but $5,000 left on which to make good.

He meets Paul Greer, a former college chum now in the advertising business, and interests him in a scheme to introduce a new brand of pickles. Greer agrees and shortly Bingo Pickles are advertised in trains, on trolleys, signboards, and in fact everywhere Pickering looks, his competitor’s ad stares him in the face. Eventually he decides to buy out the opposition and is shocked to find Ed the proprietor. He pays a big price and then finds that Ed has merely been rebottling Pickering pickles in Bingo bottles. But the orders come rolling in for Bingo brand and Pickering is satisfied. Ed gets the girl.

Star, Title and Author Should Attract Them

You can feel safe enough in booking this one, for it’s light, clean comedy entertainment and even though it isn’t a knockout it has its good bits and furnishes enough amusement in the latter reels to satisfy. If the star has proved a good drawing card in the past you can use his name in big letters and feel sure they will be pleased with his work in “Just Out of College.”

The title should also be a good bet. Mention George Ade’s name and say “Just Out of College” is one of his best stories. Catchlines such as the following could be used: “There’s more than one way of killing a cat, and in ‘Just Out of College’ Jack Pickford proves there’s more than one way of winning a girl. He does it by making Bingo Pickles famous.”

Some Short Reels

"Hard Luck"—Metro
Type of production: 2 reel comedy
This is Buster Keaton's latest, and it's a riot. If you have played any of his vaudeville memories, you know how Buster has been putting it over, and this one has got it on them all. It is impossible to begin to tell everything that he does, but it will suffice to say that you never played a two-reeler in your house. You could easily afford to feature the picture unless you use a particularly important longer feature at the same time, for if this one doesn't knock them off their seats nothing ever will. You'll miss a lot if you don't get it, and you can safely promise your patrons the funniest slapstick they ever saw. Buster and Eddie Kline, who wrote the story, must have sat up late nights doping out the gags, for there are more new ones, and funnier ones, than are usually in half a dozen such pictures. There isn't a minute of it that isn't ridiculously and uproariously funny, and the finish is a roar, when Buster, after having made a high dive and sunk into the earth many years before, comes out of the same hole with a Chinese wife and four chink kids.

"Thrills"—Kineto Review
Type of production: 1 reel sensational
A novel one reel subject called "Thrills" is being shown at the Strand this week. It consists of a series of pictures which are supposed to furnish a thrill. The film has been compiled by the Kineto Co. Some of the thrills consist of shots of "shooting the shot," ski-jumping, skating races, tobogganing, snow-ball, motor-cycle jump, automobile races, sign building, shots of a break-water, a flood, firemen life-saving methods, fires, shooting rapids by barge, telling a smoke stack, destroying booze (caption: "some thrill"), dynamiting one hundred thousand tons of rock displacing an 800-foot bridge, cutting and dropping dynamite down bore holes, airplane thrills and a locomotive head-on collision. The reel is a novel one and appropriately titled.

"Screen Snapshots No. 18"—C. B. C. Film Sales
Type of production: 1 reel fan magazine
This is just an average number of this series of intimate glimpses of stars. It starts off with several shots of Tyrone Power, indulging in a few moments of relaxation in his home, painting, first, and then dashing off a manuscript on his typewriter. Next comes an after hours love scene between Harold Lloyd and Mae Allison—but they are only statuettes of the stars who do the spooming. Douglas MacLean next welcomes Florence Lawrence to the Ince studio, and insists on showing her over the lot on a tandem bicycle. This tour takes them and the spectator, through a studio street of "sets." The anxious fans are then given several titles worth of information about who's who's husband and wife, among a number of the big stars. Next are some shots of baby leopards and lions, whose parents are animal actors. Then Peggy Cartwright, the cute little seven year old star has an argument with her director because she arrives at the studio late. Lloyd Hughes, the newest Ince star, closes the show by breaking in on the photographer who is making "stills" of several girls. Fans will doubtless find parts of it very entertaining.

"The Holy City"—Kineto Co.
Type of production: 1 reel pictorial
This reel brings out the fact that every day life in Jerusalem is very much the same today, as it was in Bible times. This is done by using quotations from the Bible descriptive of the city and its people, as sub-titles, and then giving a glimpse of a corresponding scene in the city today. This manner of presenting the views makes the picture far more interesting than it would otherwise be. It should make a very satisfactory filler, particularly in larger houses, when such a subject will harmonize will the rest of your program. There is first, a bird's eye view of the city, showing the old domed shaped roofs, and the cramped compactness of the buildings. Then, with a quotation from the Bible preceding each one, there are shown views of the market place, shepherds, and various types of inhabitants.

"The Dog Doctor"—Universal
Type of production: 2 reel comedy
This one features Harry Sweet in the principal comedy part, and what is much more entertaining, about the cleverest bull dog that's ever been seen on the screen. The performance of this dog puts the picture over easily as a first class offering. It should be a hit with children, and there are few grown ups who will not find a heap of enjoyment in the animal's antics. Sweet puts his stuff over pretty well, and when the business itself is funny, he gets all there is in it. Some funny stunts with a street car start it off, with Sweet having a harrowing series of experiences trying to make one stop, and then ducking the conductor after one does stop. He gets several laughs in the course of the two reels but the dog is the real star. Everything he does cannot be told, but it is not too much to say that he does everything but talk. In one scene the dog opens an ice box, takes out a bottle of milk, opens it and then pours but equal portions in the plates of several other dogs. Then he opens a box of dog biscuits and distributes them among the others. You can't go wrong on this one.

"The Grip Of The Law"—Universal
Type of production: 2 reel Western
The only criticism of this is its similarity in plot to so many other pictures of this type. It has one of the standard themes, where the cowboy hero is mistaken for a horse thief and is rescued from the outraged ranchers by the heroine, just as they are about to string him up. However, for audiences that like westerns, this one contains the necessary thrills and excitement. Jack Perrin is starred in it, and he makes a good cowboy type. A pretty girl plays opposite. Not much attention has been made to the fact that she tells the hero for a feature of this length it probably contains sufficient stuff. Unless your audiences eat up westerns, it will not prove better than a fair number.

"Daily Life in Modern Jerusalem"—Kineto Co.
Type of production: 1 reel pictorial
All of the reel is fairly interesting. There isn't anything of particular note in it, however, you can regard it as just an average filler. It will do very well in educational use, and in connection with religious instruction. It is made up of shots of the city of Jerusalem, its streets, buildings, and views of various types and nationalities that make up the population. Among the most interesting shots are those of the Damascus Gate, the walls of the city, in which are hundreds of the poorer shops and stores, the market place and the "walking place." There are some views of Hebron, the home of David, and it ends with a view of the town of Bethlehem.

Paramount Magazine—Famous Players
This issue starts off with the "20th Century Pictorial" giving a visual definition of the word "weather." It shows a young man making his first call on the lady of his choice. All either of them can talk about is the weather, until a lapse of an hour shows them seated very close together on the sofa, when the picture ceases to concern weather. Next comes another little story incident, showing how an old fashioned girl almost has her sweetheart vampied away by a "1921 Runabout," but finally holds him by giving him a tray full of delicious food. There are several laughs in both of these bits. The last number is a "Bud & Susie" cartoon, and this one is a riot. It's short but it's something. It's a humorous cartoon, and makes the whole thing go over. Just what makes it so funny cannot be told in so short a space but you can depend upon it being sure fire.
Short Reels

Kineto Review—"Egyptian Museum in Cairo"—Kineto Co.

Type of production...........................................1 reel pictorial

This reel will be entertainment to archaeologists, and people interested in things ancient, but will provide only fair entertainment for the big majority. Most of it is made up of views of relics of Egyptian civilization, on display in the museum at Cairo. First comes a shot of the work of excavating an ancient palace, by British engineers. Then the museum building is shown. This immense structure was opened in 1901, and cost $250,000 to build. The whole main gallery is shown. After that you are given close-ups of nearly every case in the museum, with a view of nearly every kind of an article which has been found in the ruins of the ancient civilization. Mummies, statues of the great kings of Egypt, furniture, and domestic tools and articles found in the graves are shown. Ornaments, examples of their sculpture in granite and bronze, their stone carvings, mummies of sacred animals, and samples of their “stone” literature, are all studied at some length. It ends with a view of the mammoth statue of Rameses second, and one of the Sphinxes.

"Tribal Life in Palestine"—Kineto Co.

Type of production...........................................1 reel pictorial

This reel is devoted to an intimate study of the everyday life of the Bedouin tribes, who make their homes in the country around the city of Jerusalem. Some of it is interesting but there is a great sameness to it. First some British soldiers are seen with Turkish prisoners, then comes a panorama of Jerusalem, taken from the Mount of Olives. The rest of the reel is taken in a Bedouin camp. The formalities of extending hospitality to strangers is shown, and the way in which the Bedouin Sheikh entertains visitors. All the guests are seen seated about a fire, on which a servant brews coffee in a large pan. Every one must drink some and there is considerable ceremony attached to the proceeding. When the vows are given by the men, they are escorted by an armed guard of Bedouins, who go through some more formalities before taking their leave. A fair reel.

"Whirl O' The West"—Pathé

Type of production...........................................1 reel comedy

Sush Pollard is starred in this reel, supported by Marie Mosquini and little dusky Sammy. There is some fast chase stuff that is fair amusingness, but the biggest part of the comedy is old. Pollard has very few gags that are laugh getters, and often pulls a face, not apparently knowing what to do. He's a tenderfoot in the west, in this town, and the bad cowboys use him pretty rough, until he performs some extraordinary horse back feats, and gets careless with his revolver. He gets off some acrobatic tricks that are clever, but most of the stuff falls short.

"Under Cuban Skies"—Burton Holmes-Paramount

Type of production...........................................1 reel travelogue

This one takes the audience on a complete tour of the city of Havana, and while several of the scenes may have a bad effect on thirsty spectators, as a whole it should be a reel of average interest. The entrance to Havana harbor is first shown with a long shot of Morro Castle. The ship approaches the fort and a good view is obtained of the castle and the whole water front, with the big guns lining its banks. Then follow views of the cathedral, in which the bones of Columbus are reposed for a time, street scenes in the poorer sections of town, and then several shots of the Prado, or boulevard, at the crossroad time of day. There are some country scenes, among them a pretty shot of a river. The largest golf club is shown, and shots of motor races, horses, and a Cuban cock fight finish it up. Some clever hucksters art titles add considerably to the pick.

"All Aboard For Brindisi"—Burton Holmes-Paramount

Type of production...........................................1 reel travelogue

This will give your audiences almost all the sensations of a sea voyage from Alexandria, Egypt, to Brindisi, Italy. Most of the footage is made up of scenes on ship board, and it makes a very interesting reel, a little different from the average travelogue. The ship leaves Alexandria, giving the spectator a view of the whole, water front of that place, and then follows it up for many of the famous ancient buildings and famous personages. They are seen on deck, at tea, and there are some good shots of the immense dining room aboard ship, at dinner time. This takes up most of the reel, but toward the end there is a panorama of Brindisi, and the boat is seen docked. Then come views of the Appian way, the ancient Roman roadway running across Italy, and which is still marked by crumbling pillars. A beautiful shoot of the Mediterranean runs to the end, which is very nearly all entertaining.

Pathe Review

Type of production...........................................1 reel magazine

This issue begins with a Hy Mayer Travelogue entitled "Such is Life at The County Fair," and is a succession of scenes common to a small town carnival. There are shots of the side show, the mechanical thing seekers. The next subject is the longest in the reel, and will probably prove of average interest. It shows the manufacture of paint brushes from pig bristles. The process is much more intricate than would be supposed, and the different steps in the work are well shown. Then there comes a slow motion bit, showing a drum major twirling his baton. The reel ends with some color views of a section of central France. There are some very pretty landscapes in this. It's just an average reel.

"No Monkey Business"—Universal

Type of production...........................................1 reel comedy

This one stars Joe Martin, the well known comic, whose actions at times are remarkably human. It's good entertainment for an average audience, and will certainly be a riot with children. The comic performs alone most of the time, and goes about his act in a business like way that is bound to get some laughs. He's in a dress suit most of the time, coming home from a night at the club, and he manages to appear comically intoxicated upon his arrival at his house. He has a bad time when the snakes start crawling around, and finally sweats "never again," with a most human expression on his face. It will be a little change if you have been running regular one reel slapsticks, and you can undoubtedly please them with it.

Paramount Magazine—Famous Players

This issue starts off with a novelty. It is called "Shimmy Geography," and it combines cartoons with shots of young ladies shaking a mean shoulder in several different lands. First the Hula in Hawaii, then a Mam'selle in gay Paree, then some dusky belles in the South Sea Isles, and finally a Broadway girl. They are not all shimmies, but examples of the most popular dances in the various countries. The next number is a short humorous story about a jealous husband who suspects his wife of receiving mail from another man, and comes home to find her embracing his supposed rival. The rival turns out to be a dummy, and the lady is rehearsing for a play. The balance of the reel is a cartoon—one with new characters in it. It's a clever one and has a number of good laughs in it. Better than the average number.

"It's A Great Life—It"—Educational

Type of production...........................................1 reel travelogue

A good travel reel taken in northern Canada. It is one of the Hudson's Bay Travel Specials. The title has reference to the life of a moving picture cameraman trying to get pictures in the north, with the thermometer hovering around fifty below. Some good shots of the snow covered hills and the traveling by dog sled, with all it's attendant difficulties, makes up most of the reel. They added some fish netting to protect the travelers from the extreme cold, how fish are seen through sixteen inches of ice, and the method of caring for the husky sled dogs. The titles add quite a lot of comedy to the reel, which is a thoroughly satisfactory offering.

When she is born, she is born with the airy taint of wanting to stuff, so when he arrives at estate, he becomes a taxidermist. The belle's name is Valery, right before the wedding she by Valery at last. While he is there, Valery in the room for a moment, leaves alone with her little dog he loves. Suddenly the awful scene begins to take over. His gaze wanders from the dog to the hole in the wall that he was the stuffing sticking out. He struggles and struggles, the awful hereditary taint. The big scene of the picture could be played by John Barrymore. Finally he can stand it no more and stuffs the dog. When returns to the house, he does not come. ELEMENTARY ACCOUNTING

Sounds like a primer. Public school stuff. And all that.

This "elementary" stuff seems worth while.

GLORY BE

It happened. In this industry. No one would have believed it. Some institutions never die. Whether they're right. Or wrong. Just go on doing them. But the break came Tuesday.

ROW ON

It's happened. That row between the National Association. And the Cohen M. T. O. Just had to happen. All figured out long ago. National wires exhibitors to work with their organization to beat censorship. Cohen's crowd wants to know why? Aren't they big enough? To handle the exhibitor end of things? And that sort of argument. Exhib organizations demand Brady leave field. And go back home. And Bill won't. Keeps on traveling. And talking. Trying to beat censorship. And there's a pretty kettle of fish.

Great business, this. You never know "where it's at."

THE FOUR HORSEMEN

To be reviewed later. But this can be said: It's there. The Great War figures as background. Some will say: "War stuff—that let's it out." Wrong. All wrong. We forget too quickly. Many have passed its grim memory to the discard. It is well to have it remembered. To recall its terror, its horror. To know why there these terrible taxes; this upset of world's commerce. And "The Four Horsemen" will recall it. Vividly, splendidly.

Appeal for Fair Play

First National yesterday issued a statement characterizing as "unfair" the recommendations made by the T. O. C. C. regarding the Chaplin contracts as affecting "The Kid." The statement pointed out that B. S. Moss, Marcus Loew and William Fox agreed to price increases, although they were members of the T. O. C. C. committee that advised against such a move; that it was unfair to expect to secure a six-reeler under the provisions of a contract that called for a two-reeler or a three-reeler. Incidentally it was stated that First National had not received copies of the committee's recommendations which were said to have been mailed last week.

Eaton's Move

Jack Eaton of Town & Country Films will hang his hat up Monday next at Goldwyn and take charge of the sale and distribution of the short reels and Bray product, now being distributed by that organization.

It is understood that this will in no way interfere with the operation of Town & Country Films sport pictorial short reels, now being handled by Eaton.

Although details of the plan are being withheld it is expected that Eaton will make some interesting changes and improvements in Goldwyn so far as the short reels are concerned. In addition to the Bray pictorial and animated cartoon features, Max Fleischer's Inkwell feature, the Enigma nature studies and a series of Capitol Comedies, it is understood that several other features of short length will be incorporated in the distribution.

Sport pictorials are now being released through Arrow.

Eaton was at one time manager of the Strand.

$179,992 the Record

The high level reached by "Way Down East" was the week ending Jan. 1, when $179,992 was grossed by the production. This represents the total business done by the film wherever it played at that time. There were about 10 companies on the road.

The profits accruing to D. W. Griffith, Inc., for that week were $117,47430, this figure reached after theater rentals and actual cost of operation have been deducted.

The picture has grossed $3,179,012.73, of which $1,415,736.34 goes to the Griffith company, after operating costs are deducted.

The production cost has been placed at $800,000, which would leave a net profit of $515,736.34.

There are now 17 companies on the road, the last having opened in Cleveland a short time ago.

The figures indicate that, on an average, the company's operations are about 1/3 of the gross receipts. This is evident by the approximate differences between the total receipts and the company's share as outlined in the following table:

Jim A. Brady has decided to clear through to the Pacific coast. His decision to extend this trip was made at the request of the executive committee of the National Association of Theatre Owners in Denver, F. E. Hickey of the National Film Exchange Board of Trade, and H. T. Nolan of First National will act as a steering committee for Brady.

At Salt Lake City he will be met by Ray W. McCarthy of the Intermain Film Board of Trade, and C. H. McCracken and Louis Wiens of Famous Players. In the west, Jensen of Jensen & Vonberg will cooperate with Brady, while companies throughout his route to Helens, Seattle and Portland.

Seattle, J. A. Koerpel of Gold and Harold Siegman of the northwest Board of Trade will receive Brady. Fred Dahmen of Turner & Dahmen, San Francisco, is arranging a gathering of exhibitors and managers. A mass meeting of producers, distributors and exhibitors headed by Sol Lesser, is being held in Los Angeles. President of the Producers Association, Mr. Reynolds, Secretary, and L. Michael Hanlon of the Los Angeles Film Board of Trade, are on committee of arrangements. Jesse Lasky expects to be in Los Angeles in time to meet Brady.

Competition in Bremerton

(Special to WIDE'S DAILY)

Bremerton, Wash.—As an outgrowth of the recent strike of union attorneys and musicians in Jensen & Herbert, theaters are making a move to entice the Seattle film studio to set up a rival organization. With a union official as facet, and with the encouragement of local managers, these theaters were closed by Jensen & Van Hetten.

W. L. Douglan opened the old cinema skating rink with "Mark Zoro" and "Klamer." Success so great that Douglan interested himself in the venture and is building a new theater which will open as the Union on Feb. 22.

Shipman Not Interested

(Special to WIDE'S DAILY)

Shipman, quoted yesterday, was not interested in the ad of Legend Film Prod., which proposes to след to the theater business as an involuntary petition filed against the company. Judge Knox appointed Gerald Jackson receiver for the new firm.

New Bill in Minneapolis

(Special to WIDE'S DAILY)

Minneapolis—An ordinance has introduced which would ban the showing of "crime films" in Minneapolis. The bill would amend existing ordinance requiring licenses for theaters.

W. T. Bennett of National Exec., Inc., leaves this week for Angeles.

Exhibitors and Exchanges Arrive at Unanimous Agreement Throughout Country

REALIZING that the direct contact, so fervently desired by every unit in the motion picture industry, solely affects in the final analysis the exhibitors and the exchanges, the leading men in these two important divisions have unanimously selected the regional trade press as their ambassadator.

SIGNED UP IN MINNEAPOLIS

J. F. Cubberley, Manager of Associated First National exchanges reports that from an advertiser's standpoint it makes more sense for his Minneapolis and Milwaukee exchanges than all other trade journals combined.

G. A. Ehrmann, Board of Trade Director for the Protective League, heartily commends AMUSEMENTS for the fearless and honest stand it takes on all questions of vital importance.

PHILADELPHIA LAUDS PLAN

John L. Churchill, manager of Famous Players Lasky exchange, declares that the one hundred per cent circulation of THE EXHIBITOR makes it an indispensable advertising medium.

A. J. Fischer, President of the Exhibitors' League of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware, says that the exhibitors prefer THE EXHIBITOR to other trade magazines.

HARMONY IN KANSAS CITY

H. Taylor, Manager of Pathe Exchange, announces that THE REEL JOURNAL has carried its advertising since its inception and that he feels it will continue to meet the good results from the money spent as the exhibitions are highly enthusiastic about the publication.

A. M. Elias, Secretary of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Missouri, commends the REEL JOURNAL as being a really worthwhile regional trade paper and recommends it to every exhibitor and exchangean in the industry.

UNANIMOUS AROUND THE COUNTRY

T. H. Hirsch, Manager of Lightning Photoplays Service of New England, in talking about results, declares that he has conclusive proof of the great advertising value of THE NEW ENGLAND EXHIBITOR and that almost daily he hears favorable mention of the publication from exhibitors. Leading theatre manager of Ten Theatres, writes from Fall River, Mass., that in the fifteen years he has been in the theater business, he feels that THE NEW ENGLAND EXHIBITOR is the best publication he receives.

THEY AGREE IN ATLANTA

Jas. A. McWhorter, Manager of Pathe Exchange, asserts that SOUTHERN PICTURE NEWS is a valuable magazine as an advertising and news medium and heartily approves of the cooperation regularly as the exhibitors of the Southwest look forward to it.

AGREEMENT AFFIRMED NATIONALLY

Paul Lazarus, President of Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, occupies his prominent position in the fraternity, because HE KNOWS. And therefore United Artists is thoroughly represented in ALL the regional journals throughout the country.

P. A. Parsons, Advertising and Publicity Manager of Pathe Exchanges, Inc., holds his commanding niche in the motion picture industry because of his great ability. When Pathe uses ALL the resources to reach the exhibitors directly what more do the regions need to communicate them.

Wires from Dallas and Cincinnati informed us that the agreement has been renewed in those two districts also for MOVING PICTURE JOURNAL and REEL FACTS.

Production Stops

of Funds Holds Up "Determination"—Adverse Publicity Held Cause of Stringency

A production on "Determination," the picture of the U. S. Photoplay Co., has been stopped because of financial condition of the company. The office was being cleared yesterday from 22 W. 42d St. to the studio at Grantwood, N. J., where the picture was in the course taking.

The company has been selling stock as a part of its activities. It was stated yesterday that the volume of adverse publicity caused by the disappearance of its president Capt. F. F. Stoll resulted in the falling off in stock sales to a point where the officers and employees were last week compelled to meet the company's pay from their private funds.

The company, inasmuch as current financial troubles but that period passed over. It was stated yesterday that for the past eight weeks running expenses of the company have been met by J. W. Martin, the officers, Martin and Jas. Folk, an attorney, Washington, D. C., and two largest creditors of the company.

Determination" is said to be about one-quarter completed, 100,000 ft. of film having been shot to date by P. L. McCutcheon, director.

Separate Agreements

Covering Contracts and Deposits in Working Between M. P. T. O., Pathe and Vitagraph

It is understood that Pathe and Vitagraph, both of whom have withdrawn from the National Association are at work perfecting an agreement with the M. P. T. O., regarding ad valorem deposits and standard film contracts.

It will be recalled that the M. P. T. O. and N. A. M. P. I., had drawn up a tentative agreement as a result of joint meetings held some weeks ago, but that the agreement had been signed by either of the two companies and Vitagraph are operating independently of the association in the matter.

Pathe, Lewis Innerarity, secretary, said he preferred not to make any statement. At Vitagraph, John M. Quinn, general manager was out of town and no one cared to be quoted in his absence. Sydney S. Cohen, said for the M. P. T. O., that he could not talk about the matter.

A call has been issued to exhibitors in Pennsylvania to meet in Harrisburg on March 8th and 9th. The convention will be held at the Penn Harris Hotel.

In The Courts

Horace Vinton is suing Universal Film in the Supreme Court for $10,000 damages on the ground that he was the owner of the rights to the photoplay, "Bill Casey's Burglar," and that the defendant produced the film as "Her Burglar," and has refused to account to him. The defendant alleges that Vinton gave a general release in 1916, which stops him from collecting on this claim. In reply Vinton says the release was given solely upon the settlement of a suit he brought in the Municipal Court for $600 because of Universal's failure to deliver to him two scenarios, "The Waves of Destiny" and "The Great Broadway," and says that when he gave the release he knew nothing about the claim for which he is now suing.

All Negotiations Between M. P. T. O. and N. A. M. P. I.
Cancelled by Former Organization—Cohen Slams Brady Association

In a letter sent over the signature of Sydney S. Cohen, president of the M. P. T. O. yesterday, the following line appeared:

“... all further negotiations with the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and its present alleged promoters and leaders have come to an end.”

At the offices of the M. P. T. O., it was stated that this applied to all dealings that body had had with the National Association, and not merely to the Circular letter that had direct reference. This means that the tentative agreement which Cohen and Brady had drawn up some weeks ago regarding advance deposits and standard film contracts has come to naught, and that so far as relieving what the exhibitors term “evils,” the matter stands where it did before Cohen and Brady got together at the Claridge meeting.

Two On Broadway
Griffith Will Have “Way Down East” and “Dream Street” Running at Same Time

D. W. Griffith has decided to play opposite to himself. His latest production, which earlier in the week was stated by his press department as deal for regular program release through United Artists opens for an indefinite engagement at the Central theater on Sunday, April 13.

At the same time, his other production “Way Down East,” will be continued at the 44th St. theater. This is such that two Griffith productions will play day and date at the

“The Four Horsemen,” opens at the City for an indefinite run, thus providing further competition on Broadway. The only other long run pictures so far as known now will be “Over the Hill” and whatever will play at the Criterion at that time, probably “The Faith Healer,” a George Melford production.

Albert L. Grey, Griffith’s general manager returned from Chicago yester-

In The Courts

A bitter internal quarrel in the National Drama Corp. resulting in its present difficulties is revealed in an answer filed in the Supreme Court by William C. Burns to a suit for an injunction and accounting brought by the corporation against him, F. E. Vantine, Robert A. Norris and Chas. J. Holland, as the result of a decision by the Appellate Division that the complaint states a cause of action and the defendants’ answer is insufficient.

The suit charges Burns and the others involved the liquid assets of the company in new pictures when they knew that the assets were not sufficient to meet the obligations. Burns in his answer makes charges against P. D. Gold, president, and Thomas Dixon, treasurer, claiming that they paid themselves exorbitant salaries and that they issued false statements in connection with the raising of a $100,000 bond issue.

J. F. Taylor & Co. have sued Herman Simmonds, Jr., in the Supreme Court for an accounting. The plaintiff alleges that on account of the parties engaged in a joint venture in the sale of stock of the Colurah Pictures Corp., and the defendant was to organize a syndicate to underwrite the stock at $160 a share for preferred and $25 for common stock, and the plaintiff was to have a quarter and the defendant three-quarters of the profits. It is alleged that the defendant had made secret profits and has refused to account.

In the suit of the Pathé Exchange against G. McLeod Baynes, the defendant has filed an answer in the Supreme Court alleging that the plaintiff failed to give a proper account of the receipts of the film involved and did not expect it in Canada, causing a loss of $7,000, for which he sues.

A summons has been issued in the Supreme Court in a suit of the National Film Corp. against David P. Howells, D. P. Hills, R. P. South and Harry M. Rubey. The attorney, George D. Redington, does not state the amount sued for.

The Attraction Distribution Corp. has filed two additional suits in the Supreme Court to recover, for the value of stock and dividends paid on stock alleged to have been issued by Bernard Fuerman, former president, and Henry Herzbrun, secretary, without consideration. The plaintiff sues Joel Jacobs for $1,365 and Sidney Berneheimer for $170 in dividends.

Is Battle On?

It was commented in film circles yesterday that in view of the strained relations now existing between Cohen and Brady, as a result of the latter’s speech in Chicago, it would not prove surprising if the battle were renewed once again. It was recalled that the definite split between the National Association and the old exhibitors’ league at the time Peter J. Schaefer of Chicago was president, had never been healed and that now it seemed sure that the breach would become wider than ever.

As noted, Pathé and Vitagraph have withdrawn from the National Association because of difference in policy. It is understood that these two companies are carrying on dealings with Cohen directly for a revised contract and for changes in the advance deposit system, although none of those involved with make any definite statement.

It is further known that one of the largest companies in the business is withholding taking a definite stand on the question of joining the National Association, until such time as the differences between Cohen and Brady and the organizations they represent are cleared up.

In the meantime Brady continues his western tour. He was in Seattle yesterday and is scheduled to visit San Francisco next week.

CHARACTER OF STORY..... Overgrown country boy who "loves" school, has a love "affair," and eventually wins the girl

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .. 5,942 feet

Charles Ray is best known and liked for his "Rube" country boy portrayals and in the adaptation of James Whitcomb Riley's poem, "The Old Swimmin' Hole," he's at his best. And even better than that, he's great. If you've ever lived in a little country town, or ever been in one long enough to get acquainted with rural life, then you'll know why "The Old Swimmin' Hole" is a real picture.

But that isn't the most wonderful thing about Ray's latest. Maybe you won't believe it but there are no sub-titles in it. The pictures tell the story and you understand it perfectly. There isn't any plot or "intrikut" business. It's just a series of incidents in the life of a country boy but they're important enough to keep you interested all the time. And if you don't believe it be sure to see it. It'll be worth your while to be convinced.

In his own inimitable way Charlie goes through the trials and the joys of a rube boy. The settings are all picturesque and there are several particularly beautiful shots, notably the old swimmin' hole itself, where the sign reads, "no swimmin' without clothes." A dilapidated old mill in the background is the real thing. They'll love Charlie's romance with the girl who is sickly and they'll admire the plain little girl who is so devoted to him. And they'll laugh at Charlie's effort to be the center of attention and the way he tries to get his fat rival away by a ruse. The school room scene is a riot. The star is inclined to overact in this, but it's because they keep it up too long. And there's a typical old school master who believes in "spoiling the rod rather than the child."

Charles dresses up for the picnic and gains the favor of Myrtle by inviting her to go rowing. Patty appears on the scene and throws rocks at Charlie, whereupon hero disembars and prepares to battle with the rival, but the fight ends when Charlie falls into the creek and Myrtle goes off with Fatty. In the diary which he has kept, Charlie writes, "I'm through with swimmin.' Just then Esther comes along. Esther has long silently admired Charlie but he has thought so little of her that he even gave the apple which Esther gave him, to Myrtle. But Esther is loyal to her love and she comes along just after the incident in which Fatty went off with Myrtle. Esther brings the lunch which she shares with the hero and a final shot shows him removing the last page of his diary. He's changed his mind.

Get It Quick And Give Them A Treat

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

It would be impossible to give in the above space all the delightful bits of real rustic life which is contained in "The Old Swimmin' Hole," but then it isn't necessary for everyone will want to book it and everyone will want to see it for himself. Charles Ray is the best known portrayer of country boy characters on the screen and it's safe to say that he is at his very best in his latest picture.

You can go the limit on promises and if any one's disappointed or not pleased with a picture as true-to-life and as genuine as this adaptation of James Whitcomb Riley's poem, then they're more than all wrong. And they never can be pleased. You can tell them if they've ever been a lad they'll live it all over again. Even those who have never lived in the country know enough about it to appreciate the reality of it as pictured here. Last but not least, don't miss it.

CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Good enough for any house, but question whether your people want war stuff

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .. 10,300 feet

Undeniably one of the most pretentious productions of the past few years is offered in the picturization of Ibanez's famous "The Four Horsemen" who left in their trail anguish, grief and death, and was produced masterfully by Rex Ingram. Were it not for the heavy and at times gruesome picture of devastated France under the heel of the German invasion and with what at times seems an entirely unnecessary amount of footage devoted to incidents of the Great War, this production might go over with a tremendous bang. As it is, the question arises whether or not your people want to see what the exhibiting business generally terms "war stuff."

There are many reasons, however, why "The Four Horsemen" can well be presented—not only because of the splendor of the production, the excellence of the cast and that nothing has been spared in time or expense to make this a big picture. You may well want to consider this: Isn't it worth while to bring to your people from time to time a big, spectacular and worth while picture to remind them of their good fortune of not only living away from the horror of all this, but to appreciate from what they were saved in the way of German domination? If they do not want this and if they do not consider this entertainment, then you are up against a problem.

From the very opening, showing the development of the grandsons of the wealthy South American rancher, up to the vision of Julio's death, the production has been skilfully presented. The casting was unusually capable. In the production, handling more or less important characterizations, are such well known names as Nigel De Brulier, John Sainpolis, Alice Terry, Stuart Holmes, Edward Connelly, Wallace Beery, "Bull" Montana, and many others. The handling of the war scenes is particularly worth while, although perhaps too much fuss has been made about the gold bathtub. And why there should be acres of graves for the final shot is difficult to conceive. It is so unnecessarily gruesome.

Ingram has picturized the movements of the German invasion in France with splendid fidelity. No Man's Land in a drenching rain storm is excellently done. His townspeople, frightened and amazed, are human. His soldiers and officers are typical of what America was taught the German Army consisted of. There are other bits which show a master hand, such as the Tango Dance in the slums of Buenos Aires; possibly the best dance ever put in pictures, is recorded there by Valentino and a young woman.

Ibanez's book is generally well known and so it is unnecessary to go into detail. It tells the story of the son of a French refugee (who poses as a Spaniard), and who returns to France with his family just before the outbreak of the Great War, and how in his love for the trilles and bawbles of his gorgeous castle he strives to keep them from the hand of the devastating horde. And when the son finally awakens to the fact that as a man he is needed in the conflict, of his going, leaving behind his mistress, the wife of a Frenchman who is blinded in battle, and who in the end is ministered to by his wife. It is a story of the renunciation of a great love and as such is excellently done.

Just One Question: Is This Offered Three Years Too Late?

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You have a lot to help you out with this one; first, that the Ibanez novel is one of the most popular of its day, just following the close of the war; that Metro has been lavish in its expenditures and that Director Ingram has turned out a mighty interesting piece of work. All these things should help. You can easily depend upon it that most of your people will know what "The Four Horsemen" means, and play with the title.

But the big question is whether or not a production with such an extensive amount of war incident is desired at this day. Possibily had this production been released three years ago, it would have been one of the greatest financial clean-ups in the history of pictures. The question is whether or not it is too late; will your people want to see it? If you think they will appreciate a splendid story regardless of the war background, get them in and they certainly will be pleased. You can't go too far in your promises of production and interest. Whether the entertainment value is there depends entirely upon your people.

While there are no outstanding names in the cast worth talking about, it is one of the very best casts ever presented. Metro's press sheet will give you interesting matter in the form of statistical data which can be used in your local newspapers. You can undoubtedly get the support of literary and advanced mentalities of your neighborhood because of the interest they have in the book.
An Editorial from the New Bern N.C. Sun-Herald Feb. 1, 1921

"Lying Lips," the latest Thomas H. Ince release, submitted for the first time for the approval of a New Bern audience, is one of the most idealistic conceptions of screen dramatization it has ever been our good fortune to witness.

The picture teaches the great lesson of the futility of wealth as the goal of human desire, and the desirability of the simple life in the achievement of happiness. But the beauty of the picture itself, the lavishness displayed in its construction, almost equals the work of the very few artists chosen to portray the character roles. There is not a false note in the production anywhere.

The breaking to pieces of the great ship in a great storm, the brilliance of the social gatherings among the elect of London, the awakening of the human instinct in the girl, the desire for great wealth, and the sorrows of a marriage without love—all these things are presented with a telling effect and a fine record for the beautification of the ensemble.

If all the pictures made were as fine as "Lying Lips," as true to life, as beautifully conceived and as artistically constructed, there would be little need for a censorship of pictures in this or any other state. We do not believe there was a person in the audience last night in whose memory this fine picture will not linger long. Ince apparently censors his pictures before they are made.

We predict that "Lying Lips" will delight many thousands throughout the length and breadth of the land as it played its second tremendous week at Barbee's Loop, Chicago.

Two record weeks at the Pantheon, Toledo.

Booked at the Capitol Theatre, New York, beginning March 6.

Star's Acting The Real Feature Of This One

Ziegfeld Cinema Corp.

DIRECTOR ...................... Emile Chautard
AUTHOR ........................ Ethel Donoher
SCENARIO BY ................. Philip Bartholomae
CAMERAMEN ...... Alfred Ortlieb and Jacques Montheran

AS A WHOLE......A good picture for those who like its atmosphere; appeal is not universal STORY...... More or less of the sensational in it;
strictly Parisian DIRECTION...... Very good for the most part; has caus ed it to drag at times through use of irrelevant bits
PHOTOGRAPHY ...................... All right
LIGHTINGS......Generally good; sometimes hazy CAMERA WORK...... Good; double exposures excellent STAR...... Does not screen in a way that does her justice; her acting is excellent SUPPORT...... Tyrone Power, Norman Trevor and Earle Foxe most important
EXTERIORS ...... Some pretty shots of the hunt
INTERIORS ........................ Adequate
DETAIL ....................... Film is much too long CHARACTER OF STORY...... Daughter of notorious French woman is forced into life led by her mother whom she never knew

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ........ 5,800 feet

The first production of the Ziegfeld Cinema Corp., is certainly a splendid vehicle for Florence Reed, who is starred in it. She is provided with just the sort of opportunities to which her abilities and talent are best suited. And it should prove a money-maker in its own class. This may not come from theaters catering to a high class clientele because of its rather sensational atmosphere and one or two sequences jar the finer senses. Of course, there’s nothing to stop it playing the better houses, but it won’t go over the way it will where they thrive on melodrama, with French flavoring especially.

And there’s another side to it. Many will want to see Florence Reed’s acting and those who like her work may not be annoyed by the story. While she doesn’t screen to the best advantage, or at least some sequences do not do her justice, her acting is splendid and in the last reel, in a double role, particularly that in which she plays the older woman, her work is splendid.

The direction is good except through the use of several irrelevant sequences the footage has been stretched to unreasonable length causing the story to drag badly at times. In the scene where the villain attacks the girl he has gone to extremes by having the man tear the girl’s bodice entirely off. Suggestion in instances is much more effective. What’s the use when the censors cut it out anyway?

When the law closes the Black Panther’s house she gives her daughter into the keeping of an old friend, Clyde. Clyde dies and the Cub, now a young ladys learns who her mother was. Earle Foxe, as Clyde’s son, is in financial difficulty. He makes the Cub believe that her dead benefactor has left large debts, and persuades her to re-open her mother’s establishment to obtain the money. She does and the former admirers of the Black Panther marvel at the way she has retained her youth.

Eventually the Cub meets her mother, now an old woman, in an apache dive to which the Cub has fled with an admirer to get away from the man she had loved, but feared to face in her new existence. The place is raided and the mother shot. Later the son confesses that it was he who need the money, the lover forbids the Cub and they are happy together.

Will Make Money For You If It Suits Your Clientele

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Because of the popularity of Florence Reed you may find that a picture bearing her name will attract a goodly number. Even those who come to see her work and may not particularly relish the story, will be satisfied because of the performance which she gives and certainly her dual portrayal in the last reel is worth seeing. Regardless of the more or less sensational story of Parisian high life, the picture is not likely to offend except in the scene of attack and it would be well to either merely suggest it or show but one flash of this.

Once they get into the story the interest is well sustained and the happy ending is most likely what the public wants. In announcing the showing it would be well to give an idea of the story and make good use of the star’s name. Catchlines should bring good results.

DIRECTION ................. Not important

PHOTOGRAPHY ............... Very good
LIGHTINGS .................. All right

STAR ....................... Takes some more chances

SUPPORT ..................... Adequate

EXTERIORS . . . . . . Some fine shots of speeding cars
INTERIORS . . . . . . Almost none

DETAIL ...................... Fair

CHARACTER OF STORY . . . . . Fast driver wins the race and the girl

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION . . About 5,000 feet

In "The Road Demon" Tom Mix proves that he's as much at home at the wheel as in the saddle. The picture in the main is a series of races and automobile stunt stuff. There is a slight story, but it is by no means the production's main appeal. It merely serves as a thread which connects the race sequences. Also the idea of the fellow who wins the race and gets the girl is not new enough to cause any unusual interest.

However, the story, nor its lack of importance, isn't going to matter much because there is some fine automobile racing and some very well executed thrills that will keep most audiences satisfied. In connection with the races and cars moving at full speed, it's only fair to give the cameraman due credit. He has managed to get the machines in focus all the time, and that's no easy task. There are several long shots showing the speeding cars and the close-ups of the machines on the track and passing each other are all fine. There are some good bits of daredevil riding, showing the star riding down steep hills where there is no road, another showing a fast moving car jumping a ditch and enough others to hold the attention.

There is some business in the last reel which doesn't seem necessary. They have the hero, after winning the race, together with his gang, wreck a hotel which they ride into on horseback. It's sort of an anti-climax that isn't needed except perhaps that it brings the picture up to the required footage.

Hap Higgins (Mix), son of a ranchman, would rather speed around in his racing car than stay on the ranch. Hap meets Patricia O'Malley, whose father is hoping to win the Phoenix auto race and thereby secure a large order from a Japanese firm for his make of car. Hap decides to enter the race and would have won if McCabe, O'Malley's driver, had played fair.

But the final race is about to take place when Hap learns that McCabe, O'Malley's driver, has been paid to "throw" the race in favor of the competitor. Hap persuades O'Malley to allow him to drive his second car, and when McCabe drops out Hap goes in and wins the race for O'Malley. The competitor, still bound to get the contract, locks O'Malley in a room to prevent the Jap from signing with him. Hap clears this situation also and O'Malley gets the consignment, while Hap gets the girl.

Should Please Majority And Star's Admirers Especially
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This will be a decided novelty and will be sure to please those who like Tom Mix. They are accustomed to seeing him ride through his pictures on horseback. This time he does it in a racing car and you can promise them some fancy driving. Tell them he's as good at the wheel as he is in the saddle. Catchlines worked with the title should attract. Say: "See Tom Mix in his latest Fox picture. It's a romance on wheels instead of on horseback."

You can feel safe in promising a western that's different. They don't usually consist of auto races. Use stills of some of the big scenes for lobby decoration, and if you can secure a print of the picture before you show it, you could run off a few feet of the racing sequence and then they will surely want to see it.
An Excellent Production and Undoubtedly the Best Yet From Curwood

George H. Hamilton presents
"KAZAN"

Selig Prod.—Export & Import Film Co.—State Rights
DIRECTOR ...................... Bertram Bracken
AUTHOR ...................... James Oliver Curwood
SCENARIO BY ................ Bertram Bracken CAMERAMEN ........ Edward Linden and Eddie Beasley

AS A WHOLE....... Perhaps the best that has yet been done with a story of the frozen north; excellent production

STORY....... Has even more action than previous Curwood stories that have been filmed DIRECTION...... Given story an unusually realistic and truly fine production

PHOTOGRAPHY ...................... Excellent
LIGHTINGS ............................. Good
CAMERA WORK ........................ Very good PLAYERS ...... Jane Novak splendid; Ben Deely, Edwin Wallock good in principal male parts EXTERIORS .............. Real Northern INTERIORS ...................... Correct
DETAIL ...................... Well taken care of

CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Wolf-dog known as "The Killer" saves the life of his master's daughter

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .......... 6,464 feet

The press sheet on "Kazan" calls it "James Oliver Curwood's greatest story," and undoubtedly it is. At least it is the best that has yet been filmed. "The River's End," "Isobel" and one or two others that have been produced were all unusually fine pictures and the stories all virile Northern tales, but somehow "Kazan" is different. There is, of course, the usual Curwood theme of a murder and the appearance of the Mounted Police, but besides this angle of the story there is another that has to do with "Kazan," the wolf-dog.

And it is in this latter sequence that "Kazan" differs from its predecessors. The animal has been marvelously trained and the manner in which he fights a lynx which has destroyed his young and kills the animal right before the camera, as well as a later scene which shows in silhouette (a lighted tent photographed from the outside) how he jumps at the throat of the man who is attacking his mistress and kills him, are fine bits.

This is probably without doubt the best thing that Bertram Bracken has ever done. There is just one slip-up in continuity which may be noticed. The picture has been exceptionally photographed. Jane Novak outdoes her performance in "Isobel" and all the male players do good work. The most unusual thing about the picture, however, is the manner in which the animals have been trained and the manner in which the camera has caught their manoeuvres.

With Jim Thorpe, an adventurer, Joan Radisson goes to her father, who is dying. By the time they reach the place the father is dead and McCready, the villain, who had reached the hut ahead of Joan, has made off with the evidence which would have given a clue to the murderer of Joan's brother. Thorpe, now snow-blinded, and Joan bury the old man and remain in the cabin until the storm is over. McCready returns, and when he discovers Thorpe is blind attempts to attack Joan. She screams and Kazan, her dead brother's dog, comes to her rescue.

McCready escapes and returns to the settlement and says that he has evidence that Thorpe killed Joan's brother. Later Joan finds a paper in her father's old watch which proves that McCready is the guilty one. Her younger brother sets out to tell the authorities and in the meantime McCready again seeks Joan and attacks her. Again Kazan comes to the rescue and this time kills McCready. Kazan returns to his wolfmate and Joan is happy with Thorpe.

Be Sure To Get This. There Aren't Many Like It

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The synopsis above is merely a brief outline of the story. There is much more to it and many genuine gripping moments. You had better make sure to get this, more particularly so if you have played previous pictures of Curwood stories. His stories have obtained a wide popularity and you can be sure that "Kazan" is one of the best. And the production given "Kazan" is always interesting because it contains real Northern atmosphere and because of the part which the wolf-dog and other animals play in it.

You can make promises safely. "Kazan" has action galore and it's the real thing. Secure a press sheet and use catchlines incorporating the biggest thrills and use stills that will give them an idea what to expect. You ought to be able to make some real money with this, so it's up to you to put it over. You have the where-with-all to do it.

CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Hero of a small

then returns to home town to “show off”

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... Over 7,000 feet

As it stands now or at least as seen at a pre-release showing of Mack Sennett’s first production for Associated Producers, “A Small Town Idol” has one fault which will have to be overcome before it can register its comedy value. And that is its length. In its present form it runs way over seven reels, and this is certainly much too much for a picture of this type.

“A Small Town Idol” starts off with a bang. There’s a lot of sure-fire Sennett comedy gags and the titles themselves are really humorous. The first couple of reels run along fine and consist of some of the hokum of previous Sennett short reel subjects, but it’s all good and then they present probably the biggest and most lavish set that Sennett has ever attempted. It is a harem scene which is being staged by the film company for which the hero is working. Some professional dancers entertain the owner of the harem and of course “The Small Town Idol” spoils a perfectly good scene by rushing to do the rescue act.

Up to this point the picture holds very well, but thereafter begins to drag, and even though they get some fun out of the hero returning to his home town and watching himself on the screen while the home folks all admire him, it’s too long drawn out, and then they continue it along until it reaches way over seven reels. And even the caption writer forgot to be funny after a while.

Ben Turpin is really the star of the picture and most of the comedy is derived through his actions and misfortunes as “A Small Town Idol.” Phyllis Haver has the next most important part. Charlie Murray and Marie Prevost have very little to do. Louise Fazenda is only seen in the audience of the picture theater.
Most likely a good many will be disappointed that the bathing girls aren’t given a turn. Miss Haver does one high dive in the course of the picture, and Ben Turpin is supposed to do a spectacular dive which gives him a stellar position with the Super Art Film Co.

Turpin, now a full-fledged movie star, returns to his home town and is greeted with a band of music. Some time previous he had been ordered out of town. But now nothing is too good for the hero. Of course there’s a villain, and for fear the movie hero will win back his old sweetheart, the villain makes it appear that Turpin has murdered a man. There is some good stunt stuff in his escape from jail, and of course he is eventually cleared of the charge and wins the girl.

Will Go All Right If It Is Trimmed Closer To Five Reels

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Properly cut, “A Small Town Idol” will get by nicely, but as it stands now the excess footage helps in no small way to spoil the effect of the comedy contained in it. The early reels are fine, so when the latter reels have been trimmed the picture will have a much better chance of going over. It’s not the riot that you may expect it to be, for after all it consists mainly of all the hokum and stunt stuff that has already been done in Sennett two-reelers.

Of course it has been made into one story, and there is an obvious continuity, but it isn’t big enough to keep it going more than five reels. Those who like Ben Turpin will be satisfied with it because he’s really the star of it, and as “A Small Town Idol” he makes the most of every opportunity. Instead of the bathing girls you can talk about the harem scene, which has been done quite lavishly and many extras have been used.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ............ 6,964 feet

"Buried Treasure" is another of those pictures in which the cost of production is said to run up in the six figure class, and it’s only natural that after such expenditures you’re expecting to see “something.” George Baker’s picturization of F. Britten Austen’s story, which ran as a serial in the Hearst Magazine, is essentially a visual appeal from the opening scenes of the Bal Masque to the attack of the pirate ship at the close.

Once You Get Them In They’ll Most Likely Be Pleased

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The title of Marion Davies’ latest Cosmopolitan production is sufficient to give you an idea of what to expect. At least you may be prepared to see some pirates and a buried treasure. You can promise a picture that’s good to look at and one which is interesting and will please the majority. And as far as the story itself is concerned, it’s a matter of personal taste whether or not they care for this. If they will not take it seriously, so much the better.

It is to be regretted though that when they had so much money to spend on a picture that they couldn’t have secured a better story. Of course this mythical sort of a tale, "Buried Treasure," may strike some as pleasant entertainment, whereas others might think it nonsense, but of the latter they will at least agree that it’s interesting to watch, for certainly the production is splendid.

Excellent photography and effective lighting also add to the artistic side of the feature and the Urban settings are all attractive, especially the pirate ship. This is very realistic and has been well executed, although there will be some who will know that it’s studio work for no water can be seen. Miss Davies is quite pleasing. She isn’t called upon for much acting except in the pirate sequence which she handles satisfactorily.

Wm. Vandermuellen, known as the “pirate of Wall St.,” insists that his daughter marry a Duke, so the Vandermuellen family consisting of the mother, son, daughter Pauline and the father start on a cruise accompanied by the Duke. Pauline maneuvers to have Dr. Grant come along because she is subject to peculiar trances, and at the same time she is in love with the Doctor.

In these trances Pauline experiences communications with spirits of the dead. She learns that on a certain island a treasure is buried. She also witnesses, in her mind, the battle of the pirate ship and the hiding of the treasure chest. Pauline relates her story to her father and the party set out for the island but cannot find the gold. Later, Pauline confesses to her sweetheart that she misdirected her father and that she wants him to find the chest. At midnight they dig for it and find it. They return to the yacht and are married by the captain.

The reincarnation idea might be used effectively since it is so much talked of right now. Thomas Edison’s present efforts are being centered upon this very idea—communication with the dead. If you think you can get them interested by this connection, use it. You might mention that the story appeared in the Hearst Magazine, and of course you have the benefit of the advertising given the story and the star in the Hearst publications.

DETAIL...........Satisfactory, for the most part
CHARACTER OF STORY....Rise of a steel worker to position of power
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.......About 5,500 feet

Selznick has started Conway Tearle on his starring career with a story and a part that suits him perfectly, and in which he establishes pretty good claim to a stellar position. He plays a man's size part in a human fashion, and his work is by odds the biggest thing in the picture.

Also, they have given him a very well made and sometimes elaborately staged production. The beginning, with its locale in the steel mills, has been particularly well done, all the scenes being made in real mills, while the work of steel making is actually going on. This furnishes a splendid atmosphere and provides a good location for the first thrilling scene when Tearle, as the boss roller, engages in a terrific fist fight with one of the workers.

The first and the last parts are so good that it is a pity they have allowed some faults to appear in the middle. In the first place, Bill Andrews, the ignorant but ambitious boss roller, discovers a secret of making steel from waste material which makes him a millionaire over night. He has talked in the rough, ungrammatical manner that he should up to this time, when he suddenly assumes the suave speech and manners of a man of the world. Then, too, the transition from his lowly position to the most powerful position in the steel industry must have taken some time, yet the characters do not age a bit, or change in appearance at all. The whole rise of the man is done in two sub-titles. The way it starts off, the audience will be expectantly awaiting the story of his rise to power, and it will probably prove somewhat of a disappointment to have it jumped over in this way.

The story strengthens again, however, and both the star and his support are equal to a dramatic climax. The direction in this latter part is very good. There is a lot of suspense from the moment that the sneaky Miss Larrabee causes Andrews to suspect his wife, until the climax in the fight between the two men.

Talk About Tearle In Star Role, And Promise A Strong Performance

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

As this is Conway Tearle's first picture in which he appears as star, make the most of the fact. He has long been among the foremost leading men, and his popularity will make his advent to stardom about the biggest exploitation point for the picture. Recall his work in past productions such as, "The Way of a Woman," "She Loves and Lies," "A Virtuous Vamp," etc. Talk about his part in this picture, as it will have an appeal to all those who know the star and admire his work. The steel mill stuff in the posters and stills, particularly the fight in the mill, offers good material for displays. It will be well to tell enough of the story to let them know what it's about, as it is of the type which always carries a punch. If you want a catch line use this, "If you had been raised a laborer, and suddenly made millions, what would you do in your new life? See what Bill Andrews did in 'The Road of Ambition.'"

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION...... About 5,000 feet

Metro offers a thoroughly satisfactory program picture in "The Silver Lining." It contains all the elements necessary for good screen entertainment, and while none is outstanding, nor is there anything exceptional about the production, it is well rounded out and will be pretty sure to leave your audiences pleased.

While describing it as a crook story, it must be said that the theme has enough twists and turns away from the ordinary to make it distinctly different from an average picture of this type, and in that lies a great part of its enjoyment.

The action runs smoothly and appears compact and finished. The comparison of the two girls' characters is clearly developed to bear out the story teller's contention that it is more often environment than heredity which shapes the life of an individual.

Jewel Carmen gives a very attractive and sympathetic portrayal of the crook girl whose winsome ways and ready wit are her fortune, and her creditable work in the strong scenes when she gives up the man she loves because of her past, is going to make an impression on almost every audience. Other important roles are all competently handled.

The production has been well staged. There is a noticeable attention to detail in all the settings, the races, track club room and the cafe scene being especially well done.

Three men at a ball are discussing heredity. One, to prove his assertion that the theory is false, tells this story:

One of two waifs was adopted by a wealthy family named Schofield and raised in luxury. The other was adopted by crooks and christened "The Angel." Evelyn Schofield blossoms into a society belle and is engaged to Robert Illington, a wealthy author; while "The Angel" is in Havana, a confidence worker. Illington goes to Havana after a quarrel with Evelyn and falls in love with "The Angel."

"The Angel" abandons her crooked schemes when she learns of his love, but will not marry him because of her past. Later her partner tells Illington the truth about the girl and departs, leaving "The Angel" and Illington in happiness.

The story teller then concludes by pointing out Illington and his bride at the ball.

Play up the character of the heroine, who was a smooth confidence worker until she met the one man who was on the square with her. Use the star's name if she is popular with your patrons, and other names of the cast which may be known to your people. Talk about the argument concerning heredity, which brought about the story. CHARACTER OF STORY......Old fashioned parents give new fashioned son and daughter a surprise when they appear in up-to-date clothes

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION........4,795 feet

Perhaps it is a bit overdrawn and at times implausible, but it isn’t going to detract much from the picture’s appeal for “Society Secrets” is a really interesting glimpse into rural life and there is a sympathetic strain running through it and a genuine heart interest that will please most anyone. The title doesn’t do it half justice and it isn’t so much “Society Secrets” as it is the old folks’ secret.

It’s the reality and humanness of the thing that so attracts. It’s quite natural and possible that two children who have spent considerable time in a large city, and have acquired city ways and customs should feel just a bit timid about having their old fashioned parents who still retain their country manners, meet their society friends. The story is well developed and rings true for the most part. Of course it is exaggerated at times and while it may seem implausible to those who know how hard it is to change a Yankee mind, the idea of the father and mother “doling” up to show their children they have not “turned to seed,” makes a good picture.

George Berrell and Gertrude Clair as the father and mother and certainly true-to-type types and their work is a pleasure. Eva Novak is pleasing in a role that gains admiration for her nobility. Detail in the matter of the old fashioned New England home is splendid.

Arthur and Maybelle, son and daughter of Amos Kerran, have left the old home in Stonyville, Connecticut, and live in New York. Maybelle is married and Arthur is engaged to marry Louise de Witt, a wealthy society girl. While Louise’s aunt is insisting that her niece learn something of the parents of the man she is to marry, Arthur is much disturbed because he fears his old fashioned mother and father will not suit his bride-to-be.

So Arthur writes his mother that he will not spend Christmas at home and tells Louise his folks are ill. Louise decides to investigate for herself so she goes to Stonyville. The villagers think she is applying for the position as school teacher. She accepts their construction of her visit and meets Mrs. Kerran, who confides that her son and daughter are ashamed of her and her husband and that she would like to surprise them by a visit at Christmas if only she knew how to dress and act like a New Yorker. Louise is at first disgusted, but later helps the old couple and they appear very much up-to-date at the New York house on Christmas, to the surprise of their children. The old folks are surprised to learn that the little school teacher is Arthur’s fiancee and Arthur is surprised to learn what she has done.

Say It’s Different From The Usual Program Offering

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

If you are looking for a first rate program picture that’s a little different you can feel sure you have the right one in “Society Secrets.” You can talk about the country folks whose children were ashamed of their old fashioned parents. If Eva Novak is liked by your audience you can give her name good prominence.

The picture isn’t big enough to warrant extra trouble or expense to put it over, but it will satisfy the majority if you can get them interested. The title may attract, but it doesn’t give any idea of what the story is about so you might use lines such as: “He thought his parents were too old fashioned to meet his wealthy fiancee but see how Ma and Pa gave him the surprise of his life. ‘Society Secrets’ is at the blank theater.”

CHARACTER OF STORY........... Double wedding resulting in a shipwrecked honeymoon and subsequent tragedy

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION....... About 5,000 feet

The desert island formula still seems to be a popular one with producers, the latest offering being Louise Lovely in “Partners of Fate,” made by Fox. There’s nothing new in this latest edition either. Two girls marry the wrong men, but a shipwreck conveniently puts the matter to rights by changing the couples around and eventually the two faithless ones are made away with, and the remaining couple free to marry each other.

This doesn’t read very attractive but by means of pretty settings and a pleasing hero and heroine, “Partners of Fate” isn’t really as dull as it may seem. There are numerous pretty shots of sand and water and a generally appealing tropical atmosphere makes up in fair measure for what’s lacking in incident. Of course there’s a certain amount of by-play which breaks into the main situation with somewhat effective relief, but there is nothing startlingly original about the development. Then too, the ending is a bit jarring. There might have been a less tragic, even though it weren’t as positive a way of finding an exit for the faithless two. At any rate the woman shoots the man who turns out to be false to her as he was to his wife, and then she shoots herself.

Louise Lovely is very pleasing to the eye and in this she has been photographed unusually well. Rosemary Theby is convincingly the unscrupulous one, but she is inclined to overdo it occasionally. Philo McCullough and George Seigmann are adequate.

After their double wedding ceremony, Helen and Tom, the one couple, and Frances and John, the other newlyweds, start south on their honeymoons. Frances and Tom soon realize they are more suited to each other and when the ship is wrecked the couples are separated. Frances and Tom forget their husband and wife respectively, and fall in love with each other, while on another island Helen and John respect all the conventions devoutly.

Later Helen is attacked by one of the crew, and to escape further misfortune, she and John, with a little girl they have saved, move to another island where Tom discovers them, but when a rescue ship arrives, Tom and Frances go away before Helen and John have time to reach the boat. Eventually Helen and John return to find Frances and Tom together. Helen denounces her husband and tells him she will divorce him. Frances enters the room and crazed by jealousy and hating Tom who is not even true to her, she shoots him and then herself. Helen and Tom are free to marry each other.

They'll Like The Settings And You Can Use Star's Name

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The director had quite a job on his hands when he was handed this story to make a picture of, and considering the fact that he had but one situation to work upon with no counterplot to play with, he has managed to make a fairly satisfying picture, and through the work of the stars and the cast generally as well as attractive settings, “Partners of Fate” holds the interest rather well.

In talking about it it would be well to refer chiefly to the tropical atmosphere and the locale particularly, rather than referring to the story. Stills might attract and if the star is a favorite with your patrons make good use of her name. Catchlines could be used but not without hinting at the story. However, if you think this will not matter, you can go to it from this angle.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION...... 4,785 feet

Unless an audience is willing to overlook a number of production faults, and unless they will stand for a reel and a half of slow action at the outset, they are more than likely going to feel somewhat dissatisfied with "The Fire Cat." It's a South American story—good screen material, and there is a goodly amount of colorful South American atmosphere about it, but several things mar its entertainment value. A lack of action at the start is one of them. There is over a reel of introduction, with flowery subtitles, close-ups, and scenic shots. The interest begins along in the second reel, when the villain gets in his first dirty work. From there on it moves along speedily enough, and through the last reels there is quite an element of excitement, leading up to a good climax. While the action is interesting in the last part, it isn't always logical or explained. They don't make clear why the heroine found it necessary in her plan of avenging her mother's murder, to become an inmate of the toughest dive in the country, where she becomes the favorite dancing girl in apparently no time at all.

The most noticeable fault which will be noticed by the average patron, is in some of the settings. One or two of the exteriors showing mountainous country in the background, are studio sets and the back drops show too plainly that they are not the real thing. Then there is an earthquake scene. Some of it is very good, but there is a long shot of a little stucco-building village at the base of an erupting volcano that isn't good. The quake jars the whole village as one piece. The last part of the earthquake scene, with the rescue of the hero by the heroine is well done.

The star looks very attractive at all times. She is full of life and pleasing to watch in all of her scenes. There is nothing exceptional demanded of her, but she makes the most of her part. Wallace McDonald is well cast in the hero part, and he puts up a corking fist fight with Walter Long, who gives his usual villainous performance as Gringo Burke. The rest of the cast, with the exception of Pancho, adequately handled by Arthur Jasmine, is unimportant, but satisfactory.

Talk About The Star And The Excitement Of The Earthquake

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You will be perfectly safe in promising them that they will like Edith Roberts in this, and you can talk a lot about her performance without danger of disappointing. The names of Wallace McDonald and Walter Long are also well known and you can use them, referring to previous pictures in which they have appeared. The next best point of appeal is probably the earthquake which the climax of the picture. You can truthfully say that the heroine's rescue of the hero forms a thrilling sequence. Tell about the crumbling of the buildings and the scene where the ground opens wide. It will be well to limit yourself to this much of the earthquake stuff because of the faults in some of it, already mentioned. Tell about the fight. If you want a catchline, something like this will do: "See how an earthquake united two lovers in "The Fire Cast."

Englishman secures possession of estate which she fights to retain when she learns it is not rightfully hers

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ........ 4,933 feet

Sometimes it's neither story nor production especially that make a picture worth while. "The Price of Possession" isn't a whale of a story and the production isn't one that cost thousands to make, but when you've finished looking at the picture you're well satisfied with everything and it's the sort of thing that has a genuine audience appeal. It's a woman's picture particularly. They're going to be well pleased with the way the woman fights to retain happiness once she gets it and they're going to like the ending.

Ethel Clayton, given a story with a part that provides her with an unhappy start and a happy ending, with enough for her to do in between, is sure to satisfy and in "The Price of Possession" her charming personality and manner of ease is always pleasing. Rockcliffe Fellowes is adequate, playing a dual role in the early part of the first reel. The story is concerned with practically only these two players, so the remainder of the supporting cast isn't prominent.

The story is smoothly developed and while there isn't a wealth of incident, the director has managed to hold the interest and there are some good "touches" of amusement. One bit of detail they have neglected to look after. The hero of the story is apparently killed and when he does make his appearance they never explain how it happened.

Helen Barston, wife of Jim Barston, a bush rider in Australia, is left a widow upon the mysterious death of her husband. In his wallet she finds papers which indicate that he is heir to Barston Manor, England. Helen, who had never known much happiness with her husband, presents her credentials to the trustees and although she cannot show her husband's birth certificate, she is installed as mistress of Barston Manor.

The new Lady Barston is happy in her new surroundings until the real Jim Barston, a cousin of her husband's, appears at the Manor and demands possession of the estate. His proof is his birth certificate. Helen cannot bear to give up her new home and fights to retain it, even going to extremes to secure from Barston, the proof of his inheritance. Eventually she secures the paper after Barston has saved her life. After a while, however, Helen's conscience bothers her and she decides to give up what does not belong to her. She turns over the house to the rightful owner and prepares to sail for Australia. Barston follows her to the boat, picks her up and carries her off and a final shot shows her making up her mind to become Mrs. Barston.

This Is The Best Miss Clayton Has Had In Some Time

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You can feel almost certain of satisfying your audience with this picture. At an uptown theater where it was shown after a six act vaudeville program it appeared to be well enough received to keep them in their seats until the end, and that's saying a good deal. For often the crowd begins to wander out after the vaudeville if the picture doesn't promise to interest them.

Use the star's name in big letters and promise them they'll surely like her work in this. And if she's popular with your patrons, so much the better. It would be well to tell them this one is a big improvement over her last two pictures, "The Sins of Rosanne," and even better than "The City Sparrow." Catchlines can be used to good advantage also.

CHARACTER OF STORY......Minister’s son mar-rries-chorus girl while drunk, forges check and flees. Later returns and makes good

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ........ 7,128 feet
The latest production from S. L. Pictures to be released by Metro is an adaptation of Calvin Johnson’s Saturday Evening Post Story called “The Temple of Dusk.” But somehow the picture misses fire badly and never comes near being as interesting as the original story. In the first place it is entirely too long in its development episodic. This is especially the case in the last two or three reels where, instead of weaving the various sequences together in conclusion, they go about it in a tedious fashion and finish up one thing at a time, eventually arriving at the happy ending.

Director Baker seems to have a weakness for writing his own scenarios or at least adapting his material from the original, but in this he hasn’t been successful.
The early reels contain many long, wordy captions which refer to “The Brotherhood” and “The Temple of Dusk,” but even at the end it isn’t made thoroughly clear what it’s all about. And the story itself is really one of high life in which a minister’s son “goes wrong.”
But for the sake of moral lesson they have a gambling house proprietor who is “white.” And the title writer puts words into the mouth of the minister which make it sound like a Sunday School lesson occasionally.

Also the picture doesn’t attract the eye because it consists of only sober settings, most of the action taking place in the gambling establishment. One scene, the proprietor’s private office, is likely to “get on your nerves,” for they use it nearly a dozen times and each time the cameraman shoots from the same angle. The players do satisfactory work but no one impresses. Detail is fair. Anna Nilsson forgets to wear a wedding ring when she’s married.

By the time her husband returns, (he escaped after forging a check), having made good, Ember Edwards is preparing to leave the straight and narrow path and has ordered gowns charged to Fisher, the man whom her husband had robbed. But when Ember hears David has returned with money to repay the debt, she returns the gowns. Later, believing David has killed Fisher because of his attentions to her, the girl shoulders the blame, but it happens that Fisher is only slightly hurt. Palter, the proprietor of the 赌博 house where David first met his Waterloo, is so interested in the fellow’s regeneration that he remembers him in his will, and just before his death signs over some bonds for Ember when he learns she has been true to her husband.

Better See It Yourself First If You Cater To “Particulars”

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Unless they can do a whole lot to improve it, “Without Limit,” isn’t going to satisfy. You may not find it hard to interest your folks in it because the story originally was popular and if you mention that it is an adaptation of Calvin Johnson’s “Temple Dusk,” you could probably count on getting a good crowd. In a transient house where you don’t have to worry about them coming again, this will go all right but theaters playing to regular patronage had better use good judgment.

If you think your folks like this type of picture perhaps they may accept it, although even they will find it tedious at times unless it goes out at least a reel shorter than when it was shown for review. Anna Nilsson is the best known of the players if you want to use names.

Star Has Dual Role In Quaint Story That Entertains

Mary Miles Minter in "ALL SOULS' EVE"
Realart

DIRECTOR .................... Chester M. Franklin
AUTHOR .................... Anne Crawford Flexnor
SCENARIO BY ................. Elmer Harris
CAMERAMAN .................. Faxon Dean
AS A WHOLE .......... Well made; furnishes mild but pleasant entertainment

STORY ........ Never very speedy, but a pretty theme that gives star opportunity to show versatility

DIRECTION .................. Good throughout

PHOTOGRAPHY ................. All right

LIGHTINGS .................. Clear

CAMERA WORK ................. Satisfactory

STAR ........ Handles dual role in a pleasing and capable manner

SUPPORT ............ Jack Holt, as usual, makes good lead; rest adequate

EXTERIORS .................. Few, but good

INTERIORS .................. Carefully done

DETAIL ........ Double exposure scenes especially well done

CHARACTER OF STORY ........ Romance, with a spiritualistic angle, of a widower and his child's nurse

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ....... 5,778 feet

Whatever a person's feelings about life after death, almost anyone will regard the beliefs of little Nora in "All Souls' Eve" as a beautiful conception of spirit life. This subject forms the basis of the story, although there is an entertaining little romance, a vampire, and even a touch of tragedy. The latter doesn't make itself very strongly felt, however, for it is simply a case of doing away with Miss Minter as the sculptor's beautiful wife, to make the way clear to happiness for Mary as the little Irish girl, Nora, who finally wins the man's heart through her love for his little child.

The star gives a splendid performance. She has a chance to contrast two characters in her dual role, and her work in both will be a pleasurable surprise to her admirers, and should prove really entertaining to almost anybody. The double exposure scenes have been most carefully done. As Alice Heath, the star displays a dignity and beauty, for which she hasn't been called on before, and as Nora, she has the kind of a part in which she has become popular.

It's well directed. There are no hitches, and it runs along at a pretty even tempo, never very fast, but with enough action to keep the interest all the way. There isn't any strong element of suspense; in fact, the end is evident when the picture is half over, but they aren't going to mind that very much, because just then the vampire steps in and creates a side interest that carries well. The only thing that is really weak is the death of the wife. It was necessary to get her out of the way, but the method employed is so improbable that it's very necessity becomes apparent. Also the scene might be shorter, and with less attempt to make it tragic, without hurting the story any.

The story is an adaptation of Anne Crawford Flexner's stage play of the same name. Nora O'Hallahan comes to America to find her mother dead. The girl becomes the nurse of the Heath's child. Alice Heath is killed and after almost losing himself through grief, the husband finds his inspiration again in Nora, who has grown marvelously like the dead woman through her great love for the child. Nora's belief in the return of spirits is responsible for saving the child's life, and the artist feeling that Alice has come back to him in the person of Nora, makes her his wife.

Star's Admirers Will Be Sure To Like This

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

If Mary Miles Minter is popular with your patrons, you should have no trouble in putting this one over. For it will be pretty certain to increase her popularity. She does the best work she has so far offered, and you can promise her admirers that they will be pleasantly surprised. Use her name as your biggest advertising point, and also the names of Jack Holt and Carmen Phillips, both of which have some drawing power.

DETAIL .................. Very good
CHARACTER OF STORY....... Chorus girl, wife of millionaire's son, proves her worth after misunderstandings caused by boy's father
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ........ 5,150 feet

One of the best things about "The Greater Claim" is that it provides an especially suitable part for Alice Lake, and if it offered nothing more, the little star would furnish a good deal of entertainment on the strength of her performance. It is too long, and credit must be given to the director for making the interest hold up pretty well after the audience will have settled back wondering why the picture didn't end when the finish seemed in sight. They put the heroine through a lot of struggles and sorrows, and then when all could have been terminated happily, with a good story told, fresh troubles and complications develop, and must be unraveled.

Alice Lake is really charming, and she holds sympathy all the way. Her emotional scenes are characterized by a delicacy and repression that will certainly win favor with the people who notice these things. And there is a very satisfactory cast to help her out. Edward Cecil gives a particularly good performance as the crooked legal shark.

There's nothing awfully big about either the production or the punch of the story, but both are of a class to make a satisfactory offering. The scene in the banquet hall, with a wild party in full swing is very well staged and directed. It provides some humorous touches, and an effective moment when the hero enters to find his wife in the center of the maudlin throng.

It is the story of a millionaire's son who marries a chorus girl against his father's wishes. The father has the boy kidnapped and shanghaied. The girl, thinking he has abandoned her, goes back to the chorus, and when the boy returns and finds her in her old life he also misunderstands. She has a child, and, unable to care for it, seeks aid from her husband's father, who adopts the baby. The girl becomes the child's nurse without the old man suspecting her identity. Later the family is reunited.

Mother Love Theme And The Star's Name Will Do The Most
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

There are several points you can talk about in putting this one over. The chorus girl angle, the shanghaied of the husband, the misunderstandings, all have an appeal, but probably the strongest—certainly to women—is the mother love theme as brought out in the leading character. Make one of your big points the scene where the old grandfather learns the real mother by offering to buy the child. Talk about the hero's escape from the ship and his return to find his wife in bad company. Use Alice Lake's name if your patrons are familiar with her, and promise them a really entertaining performance by the star. You can use stills to good advantage, those of the banquet scene being especially effective. In connection with the baby-buying idea, you could advertise to purchase a baby, and certainly arouse interest and comment.
Some Short Reels

“Come Across”—Universal
Type of production........................................1 reel comedy
A very funny idea is the basis of this number, but there isn’t enough to it to hold up a whole reel, and in consequence the last part flops. The comedian is broke, and he sees a policeman collect ten dollars from an automobile owner for parking his car near a fire hydrant. The comedian then gets hold of an imitation hydrant, and plants it in front of various cars, collecting ten dollars from each owner. It’s put over very well, and is a sure fire laugh getter at first, but that’s all there is in the reel. The rest of the business is merely preparatory to putting over this gag, and after it has been sprung several times it ceases to be funny. However, as it is a short reel, it will furnish an average amount of amusement on the strength of this one stunt.

“A Waiting Maid”—Universal
Type of production........................................1 reel comedy
Dorothea Wolpert is starred in this one, and it furnishes more laughs than any number in which she has been recently seen. There’s a lot of action crammed into the reel, and that is chiefly what makes it a good one. Things happen very rapidly, and several humorous situations following on each other’s heels furnish more amusement than is generally found in a one-reeler. Dorothea is a kitchen maid—a part which she seems to favor—and she is in love with the butler. To make him jealous, she claims the photograph of a young lady’s sweetheart as her own, and when the young man calls, things start to happen. It’s all pretty good amusement for any kind of an audience, and there are several really big laughs in the last part. Dorothea looks homely enough to make it funny for anyone to be desperately in love with her, and the “mugging” she does in this one registers better than some of her previous efforts. It’s a good number.

“Open Another Bottle”—Pathé
Type of production........................................1 reel comedy
This is a Snub Pollard comedy, also including Marie Mosquini, Hughie Mack, and Sunshine Sammy in the cast. There is some stuff in it that is pretty sure fire, particularly a burlesque of a military drill. This always goes over well, and most of it in this number is funny. The rest of the stuff is only fair. It has the prohibition angle for its main idea, and at the outset Snub and his partners go down in the cellar to sample the home brew. It knocks them all cold, and the rest of the reel is a dream—until the end, when the home brew starts exploding and wakes them all up. Snub dreams that he’s in the army and he has a lot of trouble in an airplane. There’s an unprogrammed comedian in the cast who somewhat resembles Ben Turpin, and he gets two or three good laughs on his appearance. Pollard still spends too much time mugging into the camera, but the reel will prove an average offering on the strength of the military business.

“Naughty Mary Brown”—Educational
Type of production........................................1 reel comedy
This is the best of the Vanity brand comedies so far reviewed. It has a highly humorous idea for its plot and they put the stuff over in good shape. Dorothy Devore and Earl Rodney are the only players whose names are mentioned, but they don’t have any more to do with the fun than a couple of others, and the laughs aren’t the result of anybody’s work so much as the situations themselves. The girl in the case is a trilling heartbreaker, and she goes about her heart-breaking duties recklessly until another guy suggests to the latest victim that the girl needs a little competition. So the boy gets a life like dummy, dresses it up in silks and satins and makes violent love to it—always at some distance from the girl. The rest of the stuff is all about his troubles, to keep dark the fact that it is a dummy, and the growing jealousy of the girl. There are a number of very funny incidents, and as a whole is more amusing than the average reel.

“A Movie Bug”—Universal
Type of production........................................2 reel comedy
This one starts off rather poorly, but picks up as it goes along, and finally develops a lot of really funny stuff. Al-mast all of the good business comes in the second reel, the greater part of the first one being a continual stall. The idea is a funny one. The hero is a country boy in love with the town grocer’s daughter. The boy gets a moving picture camera and shoots every move of the family. A city slicker with a high hat comes along and tries to steal the heroine, all of which is caught by the hick’s camera. There are a lot of laughs when he shows his picture that night. Some rather original business is brought about by clever double exposures, and in the same part there is considerable chase stuff that will be pretty sure to amuse. The fun in the second reel is better than average comedy and it succeeds in holding the whole thing above par.

Short Reels

The Two-Fisted Judge—Pathé
Type of production...........................................2 reel western

This is an Edgar Jones production, taken from a Holman Day story, and with Mr. Jones playing the title role. There is some good stuff in it, mostly offered by a good fist fight. The story, however, hasn’t very much of a punch, and only arouses a mild interest. Jones gives a good performance himself, and in fact, every member of the cast is satisfactory. The story concerns a judge in a small town, who figured that law shouldn’t be bought and paid for, but that justice should be dispensed free. His best friend trouble through the plottings of a crook, and the judge starts out to see justice done, finally beating the villain until he confesses and clears the boy he has wronged. There isn’t anything to particularly recommend the picture. Just an average offering.

Charles Urban’s “Movie Chats”—No. 5—Kineto Co.
Type of production...........................................1 reel magazine

All but the last shot of this reel is taken in England, and in a small town, and is of quite a bit of interest, there are several shots of a big overland motorcycle race, with some thrills furnished by several bad spills on the corners. Then a scene shows two men catching rabbits, using ferrets to drive the animals to their lairs, and a quick shift they shows a game of English billiards, and then come quite a number of shots of an obstacle race between about a hundred British sailors. This is quite a novel sporting event, and makes a fine picture hit. Then there are views of a yacht race between some trim boats, under full sail. They make a pleasing picture, and this part could well have been longer. A pleasant shoot in Sussex is the next subject, and the reel concludes with a sunset shot in the town of Dieppe, on the French coast.

Pathe Review No. 92
Type of production...........................................1 reel magazine

The title of the first subject in this issue is “The Land of Leatherstocking,” and it comprises a series of views around Lake Otsego, and the country made famous by James Fenimore Cooper’s stories. Several beautiful shots are among the number, as well as interesting views of monuments erected to Cooper, and in memory of various historical incidents about which he wrote. The next part is the “Dance of The Tamourine,” performed by an accomplished young lady, and shown to good advantage by the slow motion camera. Then comes a bit showing how paper flowers are manufactured. The last subject is called “Where Carthage Ruled,” and it is in color. It consists of views of the ancient city of Carthage, with its relics of Roman civilization. About the average.

The Impostor—Pathé
Type of production...........................................2 reel Western

While this is a story of the west, it hasn’t a cowboy hero, nor is there much about it to suggest the usual western picture. It employs more or less stock methods of appealing to the heart, but it’s well acted and the way they jump right into the story without wasting any time is much in its favor. They have obtained some fine country settings, and the photography at times is especially good. Sanchi plays the part of a vagabond and crook, who ingratiates himself and two pals with a rich lumberman by means of a stolen letter of introduction. The atmosphere of clean living arouses a desire in him to go straight, so that instead of robbing the old man as they had planned, he tries to dissuade the other two. They, however, steal the payroll, and when Sanchi goes after them he is suspected. He brings back the money and marries the lumberman’s daughter. It won’t do so well in larger houses, but in the smaller ones will doubtless be all right.

Screen Snapshots No. 19—C. B. C. Film Sales
Type of production...........................................1 reel fan magazine

Your fans will get glimpses of a number of favorites in this magazine issue, including Mildred Davis takes a little ride with Harold Lloyd on a very small express train, and not satisfied with this, they both change cars into a donkey cart. Then there are several shots of Vera Gordon, of “Humoresque” fame, with her own children. Next, Edward F. Koch, the veterinary of Universal menagerie, performs a slight operation on two of the animals, and consults John Martin Harvey, on his health. Thomas H. Ince is “shot” on his yacht and then Irvin Willat is shown directing two children in a scene. Then comes the fashion show, with Florence Vidor, Margaret Livingston, and others, appearing in the latest Paris creations. The rest of the reel is some views of the parade of picture stars held on the coast for the benefit of the European children. This includes a bit of comedy by Charlie Chaplin, Ben Turpin, Charles Murray and the Sunshine Bathing Girls. Fans should get their money’s worth in this issue.

Fighting Fury—Universal
Type of production...........................................2 reel western

This one stars Hoot Gibson, the smiling cowboy. It might better have been titled “Jazzing Up a Western,” as they have surely made the result a lot different from the average picture of this kind. The action goes on much the same as in others, but the titles, appearing every few feet, are in verse, whose only poetry is that it rhymes, kidding the picture. It produces the feeling that the whole thing is mere burlesque of a western, only the action isn’t overdone enough for a real burlesque. All of the titles are ridiculous, and most of them are funny, so that there will be considerable amusement in the piece, unless your audiences are the stuff fans and demand that the stuff be taken seriously. The plot is a typical one of the type, with the villain robbing a safe in the town bank and leaving evidence to convict the hero. Gertrude Olmstead is the leading lady, and the star also directed the picture. It may prove diverting after the regular run of average short features.

Bring On The Groom—Universal
Type of production...........................................1 reel comedy

Dotty Wolbert, of entertaining homeliness, is starred in this one. She looks as bad as ever, and gets a number of laughs out of some new business in connection with the fact. In this one she is the elder daughter in a family, and the younger cannot marry until Dotty gets a spouse. The younger girl’s sweet heart undertakes to get a husband for Dotty, but all the applicants flee on sight, in spite of the $10,000 that goes with her. Even a burglar submits to arrest rather than marry her. It’s all fairly good stuff. The finish finds Dotty’s long lost sweetheart returning to her from a journey. The fans and demand that a nut has been taken back to the asylum just as he is about to marry her. It’s better than most of the previous numbers in which Miss Wolbert has appeared.

New York, The American Gateway—Kineto Co.
Type of production...........................................1 reel pictorial

This is a series of views taking in about every point of greatest interest in the city of New York. It will be pretty generally interesting, particularly in places distant from the Big City, where a trip to New York means something, and the folks who have been are glad to point out the places they have seen, and the people who haven’t been like to see what’s what. It starts off with an airplane entrance into the harbor, skimming the Statue of Liberty, the skyline, and a host of boats. Then there are views of Lower Broadway, Washington Square, the Pennsylvania station, Madison Square and the Flatiron building, Times Square, and a number of other well known locations, ending up with a shot of the Woolworth building at night.

My Adirondacks Outing—Kineto Co.
Type of production...........................................1 reel scenic

For scenes of natural beauty, this scenic reel will be hard to beat. The Adirondacks hold as many, if not more, opportunities for the scenic photographer, than any other part of the continent, and for this number they have selected the most artistic. Every shot is a picture, and each is introduced by a typical Adirondack joke. The combination of poetry and pictures makes it an unusually artistic offering, one that should be a real treat to intelligent audiences.

He did not dream that he, a man approaching middle age could arouse love in the heart of that fair young girl. He could not guess that she should see in him qualities that she failed to find in her fiance, the young man he loved as a son, and whose happiness was dearer to him than his own.

Should he let her know how deeply he cared for her and thank heaven for his good fortune, or should he try to turn the current of her love back into the old channels again?

$3,000,000 Damages
Sought by Triangle Against the Aitkens, Winik, Simmonds and Defendant Corporations

Arthur Butler Graham, acting for the Triangle Film Corp., on Saturday filed the complaints in the Supreme Court in the suit of Triangle against Harry E. and Roy E. Aitken, Hyman Winik, Joseph Simmonds, the Western Import Co., Inc., the Western Import Film Co., Ltd., and the Reserve Film Corp. Three separate suits have been filed and damages of $3,000,000 are claimed as a result of the actions of the defendants named above in conducting affairs in which Triangle Film are interested.

One is against Harry E. and Roy E. Aitken and $1,000,000 damages are sought from these two defendants. It is alleged in the complaint that the Aitkens, by virtue of their affiliation with Triangle Film as directors of the corporation and their stock interest, caused a board of directors to be elected over which they held the dominating sway. It is alleged that on or about July 28, 1915, Triangle, through the instigation of the Aitkens, entered into an agreement with the Lothbury Syndicate, Inc., in which the Aitkens allegedly held control, to sell 999,950 shares of a total issue of 1,000,000 shares of stock for $99,950, while Triangle retains the stock which will sell for $1,500,000. It is alleged that in the latter part of 1915 Triangle was persuaded by the Aitkens to turn over to the Lothbury Syndicate, Inc., $40,000, for which the accounting was never made.

On or about Feb. 16, 1916, it is alleged that Triangle, through the control of the board of directors by the Aitkens, was persuaded to enter an agreement with the Western Imperial (Continued on Page 4) port Co., Inc., covering foreign rights to pictures at a figure which it claimed was less than the market value of the productions involved.

It is alleged that Triangle was led into buying the assets of the Western Import Co., Ltd., of Great Britain from the Western Import Co., Inc., for $400,000, when the Aitkens controlled the last named company. In this manner, it is charged, the Aitkens derived great profit at the expense of Triangle.

In another part of the complaint it is stated that the Aitkens caused Triangle to sell to the Reserve Film Corp. of New York certain assets for $250,000, when it is alleged they were worth $500,000, and that Reserve was controlled by the Aitkens. For that transaction damages of $250,000 are sought.

On Dec. 27, 1917, it is alleged that Triangle was persuaded to sell rights to "Mickey" to the Western Import Co., Inc., for $175,000, when they were worth $500,000. Damages of $325,000 are there sought.

Assets worth $500,000 are claimed to have been sold by Triangle to the lowr Film Corp., the W. H. Prod., and the Reserve Film Corp, three companies in which the Aitkens are alleged to have been deeply interested, for $100,000. Triangle seeks $400,000, which, coupled with the other sales mentioned above, brings the total claims against the Aitkens to $2,000,000.

In the second section of the action the defendants are Harry E. and Roy E. Aitken, Hyman Winik and Joseph Simmonds, charged that Winik and Simmonds entered a conspiracy with the Aiken Bros. to defraud Triangle and at their request in the deals mentioned in the first suit. An accounting is sought from them as well as $2,000,000 damages.

In the third suit the defendants are also mentioned above and in addition the Western Import Film Co.; the Western Import Film Co., and the Reserve Film Corp. It is charged that the individuals mentioned controlled all of the capital stock of these corpora- tions and that, because of this condition the individuals accrued the profit the various dealings with Triangle.

The papers cite again the agreement dated on or about Jan. 24, 1919, between Triangle and the Reserve Film Corp. and seek annulment of the agreement as well as an accounting for the transactions to date.

An effort was made to communi- cate with Hyman Winik at the offices Western Import for a statement that his brother, Morris Winik, stated he was not in, and that he didn't know names of the defendants' attor- neys. The Aitkens were also said to out.

Warner Bros.—Plan Addition to East Studio—New Comedy Contract With Federated

Warner Bros. are busy formulating plans for the production of one weekly. For this purpose they are arranging for the construction of an addition to their Hollywood studio. The present plant—a Sunset and 46th St. site—is capable of accommodating four companies. It covers 140,000 ft., and will be used by only three companies. The addition, used exclusively for film production, will be about twice as large as the present studio building. The new buildings will have a site of four acres half in Hollywood for building location.

Of Associated Exhibitors—Pathe Features and Sales Force Taken

An official statement was issued late Monday afternoon of the reorganization of Associated Exhibitors, Inc., along the lines indicated in this column. Harold Lloyd’s first picture for the company will be “Now or Never,” a three-reeler. It will be released March 27.

The new company will begin business March 1. At a meeting held in New York on Monday, Samuel Harding of Kansas City, was elected president, and Paul Gostono, of Cleveland, vice-president. These men, with Paul Brunet, Elmer R. Pearson, Arthur S. Kane and John C. Ragland, were chosen as directors. Mr. Kane was named chairman of the board.

The preferred stock capital of the new concern is $125,000. A complete merger of the two companies is to be effected, the new organization taking over all of the assets of Associated Exhibitors Inc., of New York. The preferred capital stock of the latter company is $100,000.

Locals Being Petitioned to Urge Bookings of “The Contrast”—Industrial Invasion Planned

The Labor Film Service, Inc., which, as noted last week, is about to finish its first picture, “The Contrast,” is sending out an appeal to 25,000 labor unions throughout the country asking that these organizations secure playing dates from their local theaters. The Labor Film Service is urging these locals to appoint committees to take the matter in charge.

It is planned to collate these petitions and present them to some national distributing organization as an argument why it should handle the picture. In the event that a distributor cannot be secured, the Labor Film Service will show the picture, under its own auspices, in labor lecums and halls throughout the country.

Discuss the Film “Menoche”

A number of clergymen attended a meeting in the Central Y, M. C. A., Brooklyn, yesterday to discuss the “menace” of “unclean” pictures. The move is believed to be the result of the agitation by the Brooklyn Eagle, which, every Sunday, is publishing a feature article by Frederick Boyd Stevenson on better films and the alleged shortcomings of the present crop of pictures.

Exhibitors who have seen Allan Dwan’s second “A. P.” production, “A Perfect Crime,” are delighted because it is “a different kind of picture.” It will “get the money.” Released February 27.—Advt.

Lichtman Deal On?

With Associated Producers—Report Causes Organization to Issue Denial

Reports have been widespread on the coast that officials of Associated Producers have been in conference with Al Lichtman, formerly of Famous Players. Indeed, some reports have been insistent that Lichtman would join that organization.

One of his long experiences in the sales end of the business it was natural that the assumption should develop that Lichtman was to have charge of the selling organization for the producers.

The coast correspondent of WID’S DAILY wired Tuesday that according to reports negotiations had been closed.

A telegram was received yesterday morning by Oscar A. Price, president of the organization, from the director in Los Angeles, requesting that he make public denial of these reports declaring that there was no truth to them.

Lichtman is due here from the coast any day.

Stanlaws to Direct Composn

Pearnyn Stanlaws, the famous illustrator, who has been studying screen technique at the Lady’s Library in Hollywood, has signed a five year contract with Famous Players and his first work will direct Betty Composn.

The picture will be “The End of the World,” from the European play of the same name, written by Enns Klein.

Ready in May

It is expected that by the middle of May some of the European office of United Artists will be in operation. The exchanges are to be established in London, Birmingham, Leeds, Glasgow and Cardiff and an exchange for France will be opened in Paris. Other exchanges in other countries will follow shortly.

Canadian Features

It is understood that Joe Brand in association with G. E. Quinnet, the Specialty Film Import, Ltd., of Canada, will produce a series of pictures based on the works of Canadian authors and that the first will be a story by Sir Gilbert Parker.

Harry Reiver, who recently completed “The Son of Tarzan” for David P. Howells, will direct the series. The pictures are to be made in Canada.

Strand

Rialto

The Rialto has a rather long program this week, consisting of nine numbers. The first is the overture, "Les Preludes." "Along the Mooseshaw Trail," a song with a pretty Greek Evans, baritone, sings "The Light." "A Thousand Masts," a balanced act, followed by a marimba solo by Harry Edison. "The Guitar Solo in His Latest Rialto feature," "She Couldn't Help It," is the main attraction. Others are a popular solo; "Pearl of Brazil," Butler Keaton comedy, "The Scarecrow," and "Marche Reale."

Capitol

The opening number is "Historical Fantasy of the American Colonies," by the orchestra. The piece was conceived by S. L. Rothafel and arranged by Enos Raypee, conductor of the Capitol orchestra. The number is illustrated by tableaux, the first "The Ride of Paul Revere," "Washington at Valley Forge," "The Sea," "Handwork," a Kinetoscope Review, showing the ability of life and transformation of soldier, sailor, knight and officer. The last number is a grand conclusion. "Black Beauty." A solo was rendered by Sydney Hapsen, who renders the Capitol News, "It's a Long, Long Story." A George Hapson, come before the feature, which is Goldwyn's production, "The Concert."

Mr. Schoppell, in the opinion of leading figures in the business, is the ideal producer of first-class pictures, and has already shown his ability on the screen with "The Supreme Passion," which was an unprecedented success. The new company will be capitalized at $250,000, and will be exclusively devoted to the production of first-class pictures, and Mr. Schoppell, as has been mentioned, will be the producer of all their films.

The new company has already signed a contract with N. B. Schiff, the well-known producer, for the production of a series of films, which are expected to be released in the near future.

After Salacious Advertising

Associated Motion Picture Advertisers are taking a firm stand in the matter of salacious or questionable advertising.

A resolution which was unanimously approved by the advertising board run in the trade magazines on the picture "The Supreme Passion," and the posters which have been issued in connection with this picture, and also posters on "The Devil's Angel." This resolution was issued by Robert W. Priest, through his Film Market, Inc., is handling "The Supreme Passion." He issued a rather lengthy letter yesterday which at one point said:

"Why, Mr. President of the A. M. P. A., does your organization pick out especially an independent producer for such an attack as this, when advertisements for which some of your members stand responsible are offensive and objectionable beyond comparison?"

At another point, Priest calls attention to the copy displaying bathing girls and "women naked in bath tubs." He also says that the film is not a success, and that it is not likely to be a success.

The new company, which is being formed by Mr. Schoppell and his associates, will be capitalized at $250,000, and will be exclusively devoted to the production of first-class pictures.

The new company has already signed a contract with N. B. Schiff, the well-known producer, for the production of a series of films, which are expected to be released in the near future.

In the Courts

The International Film Service has filed an answer in the Supreme Court to the suit of George D. Baker. The answer alleges the assignment to Baker of $18,000 each, for directing "Buried Treasure" and "Heliotrope." It also filed $16,000 for "Proxies." It alleges that nothing more is due.

Hiram Abrams has answered the suit of Jacob G. Bachman in the Supreme Court. He alleges that the plaintiff offered to get him a loan of $10,000 for $1,000, and the money was paid to him, with interest of $200 on the loan. It is also alleged that Bachman proposed to sell 500 shares of Famous Players stock owned by the defendant, and that he was able to sell the stock to the defendant. He alleges that the plaintiff and defendant had an understanding that he (Abrams) would lend the defendant $1,000 to buy the stock. Abrams denies that he owes anything.

San Francisco—Word has reached here this week that the new $30,000 Peoples' theater has been leased for a period of 15 years by Wilkes Brothers, and will be opened for road attractions and motion pictures. The opening has been set for April 1. The deal is significant in that, it is said, it breaks the so-called theatrical monopoly of Joe Cohen in Honolulu.

The M. P. P. A. Aims

From time to time there develop in this industry organizations worth while. Men with ideas, beliefs and ambitions meet, and from this something happens. So it was with the Motion Picture Photographers Association.

A few months ago Ned Van Buren, George W. Peters, Oliver T. Marsh and Paul L. Allen found their ideas were along common ground. They all believed there should be an organization of cameramen. They had certain ideas which they felt should be encouraged. So these ideas were threshed out, and the result is the M. P. P. A.

When they finally developed the organization they found that their beliefs were something like this: The spirit of fair play;

To give the producer the fullest co-operation, guaranteeing him their best efforts.

To develop better and more artistic work among cameramen by basing membership to their organization upon merit only, and having as members only those who were invited.

To live fully to their motto: "Honor, ability and integrity."

To promote the art of cinematography through lectures to be delivered at regular intervals at the headquarters of the organization.

Something like 40 cameramen have joined the organization, which has headquarters in the Candler Bldg., but which, after March 1, will be located in the Gotham Natl. Bank Bldg.

"We are rather proud of the tripod shown here; it represents many months and some thousands of dollars spent in experimental work. We believe that it sets a new standard of design and that its essential features will remain unchanged for years to come. "We would call your attention to the quick-acting leg clamps, the hinged tripod points, the unusual angular range of tilt and the fact that the panorama and tilt mechanism is entirely enclosed, and lastly, we assure you that it is as rigid as a rock."

J. Justice Harmer, President,
Sun-Light Arc Corporation, 218 West 48th Street, New York, N. Y.

Dear Sir:-

With the forthcoming release of my latest production—"DEAD MEN TELL NO TALES"—so near at hand, I feel I cannot let the opportunity pass without writing my appreciation of the invaluable assistance rendered me by your "SUN-LIGHT ARCS."

The Vitagraph Company consider this picture the greatest production they have owned since their entrance, many years ago, into the Motion Picture industry.

This is a very broad statement; made even more so by the fact that the greater part of the interior settings were photographed away from the studio. By this, I mean that we rented an ancient estate on Long Island with a large, empty house, furnishing the same throughout with appropriate antiques and furnishings, and photographing therein at least four-fifths of our interior scenes.

I may add that this would not have been in any shape or manner possible without the valuable assistance of your SUN-LIGHT ARCS.

I also wish to forcibly emphasize the fact that it was possible for me to obtain both inside and outside scenes, also daylight and nightlight effects, and with your concentrated mirror I procured many novel effects in shaded portions of the grounds outside.

I am willing to state with authority that with the aid of two of your SUN-LIGHT ARCS and other accessory lights, it is possible to take a picture without having recourse to any studio whatsoever.

The importance of this statement will be realized when one considers its relation toward keeping down one of the most serious items of overhead expense—that is, THE STUDIO—with its manifold expenses.

It seems to me that if other producers would take advantage of this fact, many pictures could be made at a great deal less cost, with a tremendous saving both in time and labor.

Again I wish to thank you for your splendid co-operation which has helped make the wonderful success,"DEAD MEN TELL NO TALES," and, in conclusion, feel bound to remark that there are yet many additional lighting effects which can possibly be obtained through the medium of your remarkable lights.

With sincere appreciation, I beg to remain,

Very truly yours,

Tom Terriss
Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

Omaha, Neb.—Offering to the Omaha business woman whom a voting contest will determine the most popular in that city a free trip to Los Angeles, where Viola Dana, Metro star, will entertain her. N. N. Freud-refeld, director of publicity of the Sun theater, in co-operation with the Daily News and C. R. Osborn, Metro branch manager there, have undertaken an exploitation campaign already proving sensational success.

Milwaukee—Manager E. J. Weisfeld, of Saxo's Strand, achieved striking results with his prologue for the showing of the Harold Lloyd comedy "Number Please." The prologue was enacted before a drop curtain up-stage. A telephone instrument 12 feet high with its receiver unhooked, and standing on end, was the unique sight which greeted the audience as the curtain was lifted. The telephone was made of sheet metal, the mouth piece and receiver being covered with scrim. The lines were connected with dimmers placed below the faces of the man and woman who occupied the receiver and telephone. A popular song was sung by the tenor and soprano inside the instrument, and the theater was wired with bells to ring with the melody of the song.

Wilmette, Ill.—The management of the Village theater is the originator of a unique little advertising stunt that will undoubtedly please their patrons and cause comment. The thing is as interesting as it is simple. It consists of a ten inch folder containing six pages of copy. The title on the cover is "Making A Movie," and below is printed "Something about this interesting work that you have often wished to know." Throughout the fold is woven a six inch strip of film, cut from a positive print. Then, when the folder is opened, you find four full pages telling in a clear and interesting fashion the way in which negatives are developed and the whole process of positive printing, cutting and joining the film under the paragraph headings "The Film Making Plant," "Developing and Printing," "Drying and Cutting." Selection of Pictures. The back page contains two paragraphs on "First Run Pictures" and "Screening The Picture." It all makes interesting reading to the average picture patron, who isn't familiar with the manufacture of the picture itself, but who would like to know what it's all about. The folder has at the end, a paragraph setting forth the policy of the theater, which starts off like this: "Thus you will see that even operating a picture theater has its problems and difficulties. It is not always easy to suit everyone, and in fact the only way problems of this kind can be successfully handled is to adopt a happy medium which will satisfy the majority."

White Ashamed of Film Version

The Evening World yesterday published a dispatch from Kansas City quoting William Allen White, author of “In the Heart of a Fool,” as saying in a letter to a woman who called the picture made from the book the worst she had seen. White’s letter said in part:

“I quite agree with you. I had nothing to do with the filming of it. I wrote a book which had an entirely different story. I sold the movie right of the book to the outfit that made the picture. Under the court decision, when I sell the movie right I sell the right to change the plot. They changed the plot and made it a nasty sex thing, and I am just as much ashamed of it as you can be, but I have no rights in the courts. I thank you very much for your frankness in the matter.”

Ertt Adler, speaking for Allan Dwan, who made the picture for Mayflower First National release, said:

“The best recommendation we can make for the picture is that the Kansas board, noted for its strictness in approving pictures, passed this one.”

Rollo Answers A. M. P. A.

S. J. Rollo of Clark-Cornelius, who is handling “The Devil’s Angel” is issuing the following yesterday in refutation of the A. M. P. A. charges against the kind of paper used in exploiting the production:

“We do not believe that the A. M. P. A. could have seen these posters or they could not have made a statement of this kind. We do admit, however, that we had prepared a herald for one of the prominent state right buyers which A. M. P. A. might find objections to. We are merely guilty in having prepared it. The fault in this case lies with the man who ordered and used them.

“Certain scenes were also used in the press book. Cuts on these, however, were not available to the exhibitor or state right buyer. In the discussion mentioned in the herald, the A. M. P. A. is acting too hastily and without proper investigation.”

Clayton Censor Bill Meets Formidable Ever Introduced in New York—Miller for Restrictions

Albany, N. Y.—The Clayton bill, providing for censorship in New York State, is the most formidable bill of its kind ever introduced in the legislature. It is in the ways and means committee.

In view of the attitude of some exhibitors it is apparently not realized how serious the situation is. State leaders are now here conferring on the measure.

In view of Governor Miller's public declaration that he is in favor of censorship, and in view of his control of the legislature, state leaders and the opinion that anything is possible.

The development of the situation is attributed to the nature of the titles used by many producers for their films which name their pictures apparently according to box office values and not according to the nature of the subject.

There will be a conference here next week of exhibitors.

Samuel Goldwyn issued a statement yesterday on the eve of his departure for Europe, where he will spend two months. The statement follows:

“America has gained a world's market in motion pictures and, if we are not careful, we will lose it in a short time,” he said.

“The proposed legislative limitations on the motion pictures will have a serious financial effect on this big industry which, solely through the aggressiveness of American producers, has established the United States as the leading nation in this new art.

“Foreign film producers are increasing their output with startling rapidity. For America to sacrifice its freedom in this means of expression will therefore result in a sacrifice of world business.

Situation Serious

Clayton Censor Bill Meets Formidable Ever Introduced in New York—Miller for Restrictions

Albany, N. Y.—The Clayton bill, providing for censorship in New York State, is the most formidable bill of its kind ever introduced in the legislature. It is in the ways and means committee.

In view of the attitude of some exhibitors it is apparently not realized how serious the situation is. State leaders are now here conferring on the measure.

In view of Governor Miller's public declaration that he is in favor of censorship, and in view of his control of the legislature, state leaders and the opinion that anything is possible.

The development of the situation is attributed to the nature of the titles used by many producers for their films which name their pictures apparently according to box office values and not according to the nature of the subject.

There will be a conference here next week of exhibitors.

Four New Theaters

Goldwyn Not Particularly Optimistic

Over Future of Industry—Sails Today

Samuel Goldwyn issued a statement yesterday on the eve of his departure for Europe, where he will spend two months. The statement follows:

“America has gained a world's market in motion pictures and, if we are not careful, we will lose it in a short time,” he said.

“The proposed legislative limitations on the motion pictures will have a serious financial effect on this big industry which, solely through the aggressiveness of American producers, has established the United States as the leading nation in this new art.

“Foreign film producers are increasing their output with startling rapidity. For America to sacrifice its freedom in this means of expression will therefore result in a sacrifice of world business.

“Objectionable themes in motion pictures are bound to be eliminated.”

An exploitation tie-up in connection with the "Mystery Mind" serial is announced by Pioneer Film Corp. The story, written by Arthur B. Reeve, originator of the Craig Kennedy stories, and John W. Crey, has been novelized by Grosset and Dunlap, and will be placed on sale in all the book stores of the country, simultaneously with the release of the first episode. Arrangements have been effected with the publishers whereby the book dealers will make a window display of the books.

Syracuse, N. Y.—The management of the Rialto utilized the appeal of "Blind Wives" to women interested in lovely gowns and the doings of the ultra-fashionable, by inserting a 4-line advertisement in the middle of a page of women's clothing advertisements, in the Herald of that city, and having all the ads on the page book up to the theater ad by offering tickets to "Blind Wives" for the first 50 purchasers at the different stores represented in the ad. One of the ad劭 proved lucky breaks for local merchants was demonstrated next day. A woman whose store had carried the ad in the evening paper reported that her supply of tickets was exhausted in the early morning. A letter management case gets a lot of congratulation from the merchants whom they had made part in public.

Hamilton, Ohio—Here are the rules of a "What Women Love" contest used successfully in exploiting that feature at the Rialto. The contest was the result of a tie-up with the Hamilton Journal, and was sponsored locally by that newspaper to find out just what it is that women love. The following rules as published in the Hamilton Journal are quoted:

Twenty-five dollars for the best answer to the question, "What Women Love. Contest starts today and ends Jan. 18, at 6 P. M. All answers must be in the hands of the contest editor not later than that date. In addition to the cash prizes, two tickets will be given by the Rialto to every person sending in an answer to the question, "What Women Love. The winning answer will be announced at the Rialto Thursday night.

CHARACTER OF STORY......Crooks hiding in old mansion come to old lady’s rescue when the mortgagee is about to foreclose
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION....6,084 feet

Exhibitors have a rush of crook pictures, particularly of the comedy variety, coming to them among the current releases, but “Straight is the Way” is just a little bit different and has a rather human appeal in that the crooks are reformed by an old lady’s smile and even go to the extent of saving her old home when the mortgagee is about to foreclose, without her knowing of their good deed.

The story is taken from Ethel Watts Mumford’s story, “The Manifestation of Henry Ort.” It is really good screen material and has been given a thoroughly appreciable production. It’s clean and entertaining and will satisfy most anyone. It runs a trifle too long, due to the fact that one or two sequences are given a little more footage than they warrant. However, there is enough that’s interesting not to make this a serious fault and there is some really good humor, much of it put forth in the captions which are well written.

Prohibition dodgers will learn a new trick—serving highballs in white colored glasses to make it look like milk. The “hootch,” too, was poured from a milk bottle. The ouija board plays a prominent part in the story, so those who are interested in spirits will have something to amuse them even though it’s in a satirical vein. A “spooky” atmosphere toward the end is of the humorous kind rather than the “chill down your spine” variety and there are a number of good laughs in this sequence.

Dorcas, a pretty young girl, lives with her Aunt Mehitable in the late Uncle Henry’s mansion. Squoggs is about to foreclose the mortgage because Auntie cannot pay the interest. Bob Carter and “Loot,” two crooks, decide to “work” the small town of Hampton and select the mansion as their first job. They find nothing valuable, but decide to make their headquarters in a deserted wing of the house.

The crooks bore a hole in the door through which they watch Auntie and the girl asking the ouija where Uncle Henry hid a certain treasure before he died. The crooks are “touched” by the old lady’s smile and the pretty young girl, so they secure a treasure which they hide in the barn and that night Uncle Henry (the crooks in the cellar) answers. Auntie can now pay the interest. That night a crook tries to steal the treasure, but is overpowered by Bob and “Loot,” who make their get-a-way after overpowering the burglar, who turns out to be Squoggs. Some time later Bob, now working for an honest living, returns to marry the girl. He is surprised to find “Loot” has preceded him and is “managing” the estate.

Play Up The Comedy Business And Tell Them It’s Somewhat Different

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You ought to satisfy them with this. It has several angles from which you can appeal to them. Tell them about the ouija board, the lovable old lady and her niece, who lived alone in the big mansion, about the two crooks who reformed. For those who may have read Ethel Watts Mumford’s book mention the original title, “The Manifestation of Henry Ort.” Use the names of Matt Moore and Gladys Leslie. The latter will be remembered for her work in Vitagraph pictures and Matt Moore has done several worth-while pictures of late, “The Passionate Pilgrim,” the most recent.

Promise them a ghost sequence which will give them plenty of laughs. Play up the comedy angle and tell them they’ll enjoy the two crooks who picked out a small country place to “work.” Catchlines would be sure to interest them.
Rather Weak Offering Due Mostly To Lack Of Incident

"THE CONCERT"
Goldwyn

DIRECTOR ......................... Victor Schertzinger
AUTHOR ............................... Herman Bahr
SCENARIO BY ......................... J. E. Nash
CAMERAMAN .......................... George Webber

AS A WHOLE....Weakest one Goldwyn has had in some time; lacks incident and depends on sub-titles for humor and understanding

STORY......Not enough to it for a feature picture; isn't new and has but one situation

DIRECTION.....Has handled production satisfactorily, but too much handicapped to make an impression

PHOTOGRAPHY .................. Fair
LIGHTINGS..Not the best; print seemed to be faded

EXTERIORS ....... Pretty mountain lodge shots
INTERIORS .................. Correct
DETAIL ...................... All right

CHARACTER OF STORY......Butterfly wife realizes she loves her own husband best when she sees him with another woman

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ........ 5,379 feet

The main trouble with "The Concert" is that there's nothing to it in the way of story, and what there is, is contained in the one situation that isn't at all new: that of a wife who thinks she loves her piano teacher only to realize she loves her husband when she finds him making love to the piano teacher's wife. That's all there is to it. The director certainly had a job on his hands when he was told to make a feature of it and the result is a slow moving affair that depends wholly on sub-titles in its telling, and in this way secures a slight comedy vein which does a whole lot to lift it out of the rut.

Even though the reels consist of alternate scenes and captions, it's safe enough to say that the title-writer saved the picture for without them it wouldn't get very far. And they've been written in a vein that takes any serious aspect away from the theme—a bit of good judgment.

The cast is capable and well suited with the exception of Lewis S. Stone, who is miscast as the maestro. His performance isn't at all convincing. He had a Leo Ditrichstein make-up but certainly didn't imitate him. Myrtle Stedman, as his wife, is quite pleasing while Mabel Julienne Scott goes a bit too far in her vamping intentions. Raymond Hatton is the husband of the butterfly wife. No one works very hard.

Martinot, the famous pianist is married, but has the attentions of so many other women forced upon him that he cannot overcome them. He has women pupils, among them the wife of Dr. Hart. Mrs. Hart is infatuated with Martinot to the extent that she invites him to go to his hunting lodge for a rest "alone and she will go along."

A jealous pupil informs the Doctor of his wife's being at the lodge. He seeks Mrs. Martinot and they decide to give the "romancers" a dose of their own medicine, so together they go to the cabin where they find Mrs. Hart and the maestro. The doctor and Mrs. Martinot act very unconcerned and promise to make the divorce easy. Mrs. Hart suddenly realizes that she could never stand the pianist whose wife is really a nurse for him. There is a reconciliation and Mrs. Hart begs forgiveness, while the musician promises never to think of a woman other than his wife.

Will Get Through For One Time But Won't Stand Extended Run

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This isn't one that you should go out of your way to get. If it comes to you on contract you will probably not be hurt by playing it. It isn't worthy of a run, however. Goldwyn has been putting out pictures of much higher calibre and better entertainment than this, but one weak one shouldn't discourage you for the Goldwyn releases of late have all been satisfactory.

You can say it is an adaptation of the stage play in which Leo Ditrichstein starred. And you can give an idea of the story in the lines: "She thought she was in love with the famous maestro but when she discovered her husband playing at her game too, she knew she was wrong." Or, "Attend 'The Concert,' at the blank theater and you'll see how a husband cured his wife of a silly infatuation."
A KNOCKOUT in Akron

Wires Allen T. Himmons, of the Allen Theatre: "'Outside The Law' a positive knockout. Everybody tickled to death. The most people that ever came to see a picture at the Allen Theater. At least fifteen hundred turned away first day. Broke all records. Universal certainly put over a wonderful advertising and exploitation campaign."

SECOND SHOWING in Washington

Another hot wire: "Moore's Rialto Theater engagement of 'Outside The Law' one of the biggest in the history of the house. Mr. Moore just booked picture for his Garden Theater, which is only two blocks from the Rialto, for a second showing."

CHARACTER OF STORY..... Son of man imprisoned for murder, untangles plot and finally discloses real murderer

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .......... 4,494 feet

There isn’t a whole lot that can be said in favor of “Dynamite Allen” as a production or as screen entertainment, and its faults are almost entirely due to the direction. There is a good melodramatic theme that could have been made into an entertaining and exciting picture under different handling, but as it is, the story has been loosely hung together doing a lot of rambling, and then hurrying to a conclusion that lacks strength. Director Henderson took up several story threads, started them off with some interest, and then left them dangling.

In the first place, the reel at the beginning is in the nature of a prologue, the action taking place when the hero was a child. A very good climax is developed in this part through the incidents of a murder and the following trial of an innocent man. Then when the real story starts, and the star makes his first appearance, there is a big let down, and the action starts all over again. In the following sequences, two other minor themes branch out from the main plot, and these too, are brought to no satisfactory termination. The effect of this is an incoherence and generally unsatisfactory result.

The star is likeable enough, and he does everything that is required of him, but his part loses some of its importance by reason by the length of the prologue, and the other incidents in the latter part which do not have him as the central character. The cast is quite large, but with the exception of Edna Murphy, whose beauty puts her over, there is none above average.

One thing that does deserve favorable mention is a train wreck scene. It is a short shot in which an engine at full speed crashes over an open drawbridge, and whether it is a miniature or not, the effect is the required thrill. This, and a good fist fight help to offset what a lot of people will regard as hokum in the same part, when a girl who has been paralysed all her life, suddenly finds herself able to use her arms and legs, in time to save the hero’s life.

You’d Best Go Very Easy On This One

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The fact that they were making pictures of about this class several years ago, is enough to make it advisable to lay off talking much about this one. The star has a sizable following, and the best thing to do is to limit yourself to the use of his name, depending on it alone to get them in. Don’t make promises about the picture, or if you do, confine yourself to such points as the train wreck, the big fight, and the fact that it is a mining romance. Play the star up, and mention previous pictures of his, if you have played them. Stills of the train wreck would be effective, as will those of the burning of the hero’s home. If you slide it over without much comment, you may be able to satisfy some. These lines can be used: “Se the proof of the statement that ‘Murder will out’ in ‘Dynamite Allen,’” and “See a racing locomotive plunge through an open bridge in ‘Dynamite Allen.’”
The Dallas, Texas, territory is often considered one of the most unemotional regions of the Country with regard to motion picture productions.

One could never think this when you realize how remarkable are the telegrams of appreciation and liking for "A Small Town Idol" as published on this page from substantial exhibitors and representatives of the thoroughly conservative Dallas daily newspapers. "A Small Town Idol" is one of the biggest hits released in the Dallas territory in years and is repeating in this territory the record it has established throughout the United States.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.... 6416 feet
Striped all of it's thriller, lavish sets, and general atmosphere of the spectacle, "Lying Lips" is probably the best feature picture of the year.

It is a spectacular production, which Associated Producers will distribute, is far from a straight picture, for it has been made into an elaborate spectacle and has that quality which appeals from the atmosphere of production. It's always good to look at.
Perhaps the best miniature work that has ever been done is seen in the picture. The vessel is overhanging through the waves, and when it strikes a wave and blows up, the picture of debris are actually sitting around the wreck. This has certainly been effectively executed.

Money has not been spared and there is, besides,
the sticking of the ship, another through different form of thrill, in the lavish party given by the rich man
in honor of his bride-to-be. The beautiful ballroom scenes and the entertainment provided for the guests
in the form of a masquerade, largely helping aids, are bound to have their own appeal. The direction is excellent, especially with regard to the handling of phrases. There are one or two small matters of detail which go a bit amiss, but they aren't likely to be noticed by the average audience. House Peters is splendid in the role of the lover with Florence Vidor as an attractive heroine. Joseph Napier is the suave rich suitor.

Nance Abbott, an English girl, stars Carlos in the part of the person for getting away for a while from "Villa" Chester, rich and twice her age, whom she is to marry in Canada. Nance falls in love with Blue Cornwall, a rambunctious, but later when Blue discovers the engagement ring on Nance's finger, she decides to go back to London, because she realizes she could not live the way Blue did. Blue tells her to go and stay on the same vessel. The boat is wrecked and Nance and Blue are evidently the only survivors. Thinking they will die, they promise themselves marriage and ride the "night of God." But later, when they are at land, Nance again rebels and asks Blue not to let her fool him with her.

The girl is saved and Blue apparently lost, but later he appears under the name of Charles Spruce, now a rich man, but reforming his life. During the ceremony of her marriage to Chester, Nance is uncovered by the public, and tells them she is another man's wife. She later joins Blue on a steamer bound for Australia.

Good Direction and An Unusual Story Make It Interesting

EXTERIORS ..................... Some artistic locations

DETAIL ...................... Correct
CHARACTER OF STORY......Romance of rich man and poor girl, both of whom had become cynics
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... 5,980 feet

A thoroughly unusual angle to its society theme, and careful direction that keeps the action always on the move, are sufficient reasons for calling Eugene O'Brien's latest vehicle a satisfactory offering. John Lynch's story makes good picture material from the moment in the first reel when the unusual begins with the hero marrying the heroine, before any complications have arisen.

From then on its appeal is made really strong through skillful handling of sequences in which the hero tries to prove that he really loves his wife, while battling against the combined plottings of designing society women and a wealthy villain. Then there is enough suspense and mystery created by a murder to insure interest and attention through the last reels.

Director Crosland has done much for the polish of the production by obtaining a realistic and artistic "society" atmosphere through carefully, and sometimes elaborately constructed settings. They aren't over done, and they contribute noticeably to the effect. A cafe scene is very well staged.

It cannot be said that there is anything unusual about the star's performance. In the role of a wealthy society man he has a characteristic part—one that suits him very well, and which he plays without effort. He isn't called upon for anything out of the ordinary, but his work is adequate to the part, and will undoubtedly satisfy his admirers. Olive Tell gets a good deal out of the part opposite.

Hugh Ledyard is turned down by Phyllis Leigh, because his fortune is smaller than Peter Lester's. Hugh, disgusted with the world, marries Eleanor Ashe, a poor outcast, who is herself a cynic. Hugh eventually falls in love with his wife, who will have nothing to do with him.

Lester is murdered in Hugh's home, and Eleanor's father, who is Hugh's butler, is accused.

After weeks spent away from his wife, Hugh finds the real murderer, and returns to his home to find his love at last reciprocated.

Star's Admirers Will Like It. So Should Others

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You should have no trouble in obtaining satisfactory results with this one, on the strength of the star's name, and from the fact that the picture will without doubt back you up after you get them in. It will surely please the star's following, and you can promise them exactly the kind of a performance they will expect of him. If he is popular with your patrons, his name alone will probably do the business, but you also have other points to work on. The unusualness of the story, beginning with a world-weary man's marriage with a disgusted girl, offers plenty of opportunity to arouse interest in the plot. Talk about the mystery element arising from the murder. Also talk about the elaborateness of the settings. Mention the hunt scene and the realistic cabaret scene, in which the chorus of the New York Strand Roof took part. The title offers opportunity for a strong contrast of the two characters who are the center of the romance.

CHARACTER OF STORY......Saphead son of father’s fortune, by accident

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ........ 6,650 feet

“The Saphead” has been taken from Bronson Howard’s play “The Henrietta,” and has been supervised in production by Winchell Smith. “The Saphead” is probably what you’d call a comedy-drama though the latter is kept in the background and merely serves to feed the comedy business. William H. Crane, the veteran actor, is co-starred with Buster Keaton, who makes his first appearance in a feature picture.

Crane is not the principal character and both the part he plays and subsequently his performance, are overshadowed by the work of Keaton, who carries the picture through and without him it would be dull indeed. When he is off the screen you immediately are aware of his absence. Those who had the making of the picture in hand probably realized this, though because Keaton is kept busy most of the time and all the comedy comes from him. The director has done very well, but there are some chances for laughs that he has missed.

“The Saphead” would have done much better in five reels and the lapses between laughs would not have been so noticeable. The best bits come through Keaton’s attempt to be a regular “sport.” He visits cabarets and gambling houses and when one is raided he hands a detective a bill to make sure he is arrested, but the man only makes sure he isn’t arrested and Buster doesn’t even get a ride in the patrol. His efforts to marry the girl he loves and later his appearance in the stock exchange are other good bits.

Nicholas Van Alstyne, is a Wall Street millionaire, and his son Bertie, is called “The Saphead,” by his friends who tell him that Agnes, his father’s ward, will love him if she thinks he’s a sport so Bertie stays out until three in the morning and tries hard to be wild, but when Agnes says she does love him, he confesses that he is really good and has only been playing “wild,” to trick her into loving him. Agnes doesn’t mind and they plan to marry.

Bertie’s father gives him a million and puts him out of the house and says he cannot marry Agnes until he makes something of himself. Bertie builds a home for Agnes and they plan to elope, but Bertie’s sister finds it out and insists they be married at home. The ceremony is interrupted by a girl coming in with evidence that implicates the sister’s husband. The husband quickly makes it appear that Bertie is the guilty one and the marriage is off. Eventually the truth comes out and after saving his father’s fortune Bertie marries Agnes.

They May Like Keaton’s Work
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

If you have played any of Buster Keaton’s two reelers which Metro have distributed you can book “The Saphead,” and satisfy them. Even if they haven’t seen him before this would be a good opportunity to introduce him, for his work in comedies is bringing him to the fore and he can always be counted on when it comes to real comedy entertainment. There are some dry stretches in between the laughs which could be cut to advantage, and when this is done the picture will be more suited to the average program.

Keaton is your best bet if your folks are acquainted with him. If not, use catchlines such as: “He was called ‘The Saphead,’ but he saved his father’s fortune. How’d he do it?” You might use the author’s name and refer to the stage play also.

Star Somewhat Redeems a Very Mechanical Thriller

STORY ...... From Augustus Thomas' stage play of the same name DIRECTION ...... Not always good; action sometimes stiff, and often too much stress on incidents
PHOTOGRAPHY .................. Good
LIGHTINGS .................. Usually good
CAMERA WORK .................. Average
STAR ...... Does well, hampered by mediocre direction SUPPORT ...... Gloria Hope is pleasing; the rest fair EXTERIORS .................. Some good westerns

DETAIL .................. Fair
CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Man who thinks himself a deserter from the army is blackmailed by his former captain
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ....... 4,875 feet

The transfer of Augustus Thomas' “Colorado” to the screen isn't overly successful. It's probably about fifty-fifty the fault of the scenario and the direction. At any rate, the result is a series of mechanical and generally improbable incidents and situations, which are so apparently manufactures to allow the plot to thicken, that they often fail to register. And they make it tough for Frank Mayo who is a pleasing performer, capable of being more entertaining than he is in this.

Use Mayo's Name, But Don't Promise Too Much

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Probably the best thing to talk about in advertising this is the star, who undoubtedly has quite a large following, and the fact that it is an adaptation of one of Augustus Thomas' plays. The latter is known as one of the foremost American writers for the stage. On the star's name and the author's, you can most likely get them in, but you will want to be careful how much you promise for the picture. The best plan is to confine yourself to the two points mentioned above any say nothing about the production except to tell them what type of story it is. You can talk a little about the mine flood if you want to give an idea of excitement, but it will be well not to go too strong on any of it. If you want a catch line use something like this: “See how an army officer, who thought he was a deserter, was cheated out of a gold mine and then got it back, in 'Colorado.'"
Russell At Best In Entertaining Crook Story

DIRECTOR .................. Scott Dunlap
AUTHOR .................... Jules Furthman
SCENARIO BY ............ Jules Furthman and Scott Dunlap

INTERIORS .................... Correct
DETAIL ....................... Good
CHARACTER OF STORY......Crook assumes brother's place as minister when latter is killed, thereby bringing about his own regeneration
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION......About 5,000 feet

There seems to be almost as many crook pictures on the market as there are columns in the papers of late that tell about recent doings in the crook business.
"The Cheater Reformed," William Russell's latest for Fox, is a crook story and one that makes first rate entertainment. There are improbable bits, of course, but they don't matter a great deal since they provide good incident.

It isn't likely that a wife would be deceived as easily as to believe that her husband's twin brother was her husband, even though she had never heard of a brother. There are no two voices that are identical. There is a sort of effective church atmosphere and spiritual influence that might even please the Zion City folks. The cheater brings about his own reformation while attempting to hide in minister's clothes. There is some good suspense toward the end and the climax is good also.

This is probably the best thing the star has had of late and he does well in both roles, although the character of the minister is eliminated early in the story. Jack Brammall gives a touch of comedy to the picture and Seena Owen is quite pleasing as the minister's wife. Sam De Grasse is the unscrupulous tenement owner and "pillar," of the church.

Dr. Luther McCall, is rector of a small town church. The minister is killed in a train wreck and his twin brother, a crook, who was with him, is taken for the minister and Mrs. McCall notified. Upon regaining consciousness, "Lefty" McCall realizes what has happened and seeing a chance for escape, he accepts the situation and is soon convalescent in the rector's home.

Mrs. McCall cannot understand her "husband's" attitude of reserve toward her.

In the same town is Thomas Edinburgh, influential and a pillar of Dr. McCall's church. Edinburgh has taken a fancy toward Mrs. McCall and threatens her with his motto: he gets what he wants and if he doesn't get it, he takes it. He happens to want Mrs. McCall and goes about it by trying to prove to her that her minister husband was formerly a crook. "Lefty" goes so far as to preach his brother's sermons. Later Mrs. McCall learns "Lefty's" true identity, but she has grown to love him and in order to silence Edinburgh, she agrees to go away with the latter. But "Lefty" hears of her sacrifice, pulls his last "trick," and steals Edinburgh's evidence. He is happy with his brother's wife, and continues as rector.

Use The Star's Name And Catchlines

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Exhibitors who have been booking the recent Russell pictures will find that "The Cheater Reformed," is about the best thing he has done of late and one in which he has a story with a role better suited to his personality. In the dual role of minister and crook he has two widely differently characters to portray, and he handles them very well. You can make a point of this in your announcements.

Make Russell's name the main attraction and then use the title with catchlines along the following order:
"He became a minister to hide his identity as a crook but see how "The Cheater Reformed." Or, "If you found out your husband had been killed and his twin brother had taken his place, what would you do. She married him in "The Cheater Reformed." "

CHARACTER OF STORY . . . Girl taken from home and trained to work with crooks, gives up stealing to fall in love with another girl’s fiance

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION . . . 4,423 feet

Bebe Daniels’ latest starring vehicle for Realart is an adaptation of the novel and stage play, “The Bishop’s Carriage.” It makes a satisfactory screen story and has been given a good production. The star is surrounded by a capable company of players and the picture as a whole, is one which will give immediate satisfaction. It’s not at all unusual or, for that matter, different, but it contains a fairly interesting crook story with a part that suits Miss Daniels will enough but doesn’t provide her with the opportunities of her last picture “Oh, Lady Lady.”

“She Couldn't Help It,” is first of all a crook story but there are some rather good bits of comedy that register and make you wish there were more. For the most part the direction is first rate although once or twice the interest is allowed to slacken. But it isn’t for long and the following scenes usually make up for the previous slow bit.

There are some matters of detail which may be criticized. The star is taken from the orphan asylum and she’s close enough to the camera for the make-up to be plainly visible. Not likely they allow such things in orphan asylums. Miss Daniels’ performance is quite pleasing and Emory Johnson is a good looking hero. Others are Vera Lewis, Helen Raymond, Z. Wall Covington, Ruth Renick, Gertrude Short and Milla Davenport.

Tom Dorgan needs a girl to help him in his “tricks,” so he secures an orphan and trains her in the art of “crookery.” Nance Olden becomes proficient in her line but the unexpected happens while she and Tom are “working” in the Union Station. Nance faints in front of a man who has just displayed a diamond necklace. While the gentleman assists the girl, Tom takes the necklace from his pocket. Nance recovers and later Tom passes the jewel to her.

Mr. Ramsey, the victim, discovers his loss and connects it with the girl. Nance hides in an old carriage and later when its occupant returns, he is Bishop Van Wagenen, she pretends she is “touched” and calls him “papa.” He pities the girl and takes her to the home of his friend, Mrs. Ramsey. Nance is forced to keep up the game but late at night, Tom is found in the room where Nance is sleeping and sent to jail for three years. Nance’s game is apparent to William Latimer, fiance of Nellie Ramsey. He helps Nance to go straight and later marries her.

The Star’s Name And The Title Should Get Them

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

It shouldn’t be hard to interest them in this one. You have a good title to work with, the star has probably gained a following by now, and then too, you have the original novel and stage play names to use. Tell them it’s an adaptation of “In the Bishop’s Carriage.” The name should be familiar everywhere for it has been quite a stock company favorite. Link up the title with catchlines such as “She was a thief but ‘She Couldn’t Help It.’” Catch lines for teaser adds in your newspaper are suggested in Realart’s press sheet. They should prove effective.

The picture isn’t big enough to warrant expense so do your best to interest them with your announcements. Stills for lobby display might attract them and tell them they’ll like the star. It would be well to make good use of her name, especially if you intend using her pictures in the future.

The story of "The Tidal Wave," hasn't been done in a way that makes the most of its possibilities. Of course it's more or less commonplace of itself because the idea of the girl who loves a man unworthy of her while the good fellow stands by and suffers, isn't at all new. The thing that injures it most seems to be the acting of the leading lady. Her performance is forced and unnatural. The others in the cast are quite capable, although Pardoe Woodman is miscast in the part of the artist who fascinates the young girl.

This isn't a very strong one and the acting is below the average. LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .......4,982 feet

“The Easy Road” is the sort of picture that won’t impress because it’s so awfully bad and won’t surprise you by being so good. It’s an in-between. The production, that is, the settings and general atmosphere together with the work of the players including the star and Gladys George and Lila Lee, will please. Paramount seems to be having difficulty in finding the right material for Meighan, now that he’s a star. “The Easy Road” is just a bit too easy for him. He’s capable of more than the part of Leonard Fayne, sailor-novelist, offers.

Also Blair Hall’s story hasn’t sufficient incident for a picture. There’s really only the one situation to work on, and even though it was necessary to do some padding to round it out, the director deserves credit for not making the thing boring and the picture is not so long that it will become tiresome.

Gladys George is quite a pleasing leading lady. She photographs beautifully and has a personality of her own. Lila Lee probably wasn’t very happy in the part they gave her and you probably wouldn’t know her in her gingham and specs if they didn’t tell you. Nevertheless, she does well. The star’s personality dominates, but he doesn’t seem at home in the role of a man who is content to live on his wife’s money.

After his marriage to Isabel Grayce, a wealthy girl, Leonard Fayne, novelist, finds it hard to work, because he doesn’t have to. He even goes to the extent of renting a downtown studio, but within a year he becomes an idler. Isabel realizes that it is her money that has caused Leonard’s change and on the advice of a friend she goes to Europe, leaving a note for her husband that he may draw on her account.

Leonard determines not to touch his wife’s money and sinks lower and lower until he goes to the dock to end it all. He is just in time to save Ella Klotz from drowning herself. The girl has become despondent because of her failing eyesight. Leonard takes Ella to his deserted studio, where he cares for her and the little girl becomes devoted to him. Isabel has remained true to Leonard all the while and eventually longs to see him, so she returns to America. A “friend” informs her that Leonard is not living alone, but Isabel goes to the studio to learn for herself, and there finds Ella. She understands and there is a reconciliation.

Star’s Admirers May Be Pleased
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

It’s to be hoped that Paramount will be able to find some more suitable vehicles for Meighan. Those he has had so far have been just on the border line between good and bad. It’s difficult, of course, to altways get just what is required for any one star and keep them coming uniformly good, but Meighan needs a story that gives him a chance to act. Even “The Frontier of the Stars,” his last picture, gave him more to do than the part of Leonard Fayne.

You can book “The Easy Road” and probably satify them especially if they like Meighan. They’ll like his leading lady in this, too. For those who may have read the story you might mention Blair Hall’s name and use the lines: “He lost all ambition for work when he married a rich girl. But see how he ‘found’ himselt and discovered ‘The Easy Road’ isn’t always the happiest road.”

“A PERFECT CRIME”

CHARACTER OF STORY....... Bank clerk who lives double existence in his plan to rob a bank and “get away with it”

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION....... 4,739 feet

Allan Dwan’s second production for Associated Producers is an interesting combination of sound philosophy and a splendid character study with a little romance on the side. It is an adaptation of Carl Clausen’s Saturday Evening Post story and while there are things in it that aren’t naturally plausible, they hardly detract from the interest which is extended through the double life of the bank clerk who is a drudge by day and a gentleman by night.

Monte Blue is not even a featured player, but “The Perfect Crime” is all his. He handles the Jekyll and Hyde-like role of Walter Griggs and James Brown splendidly. In the former he has a part more after the character which he does best and for which he will be remembered in “The Jacklins.” The fact that some of the incidents aren’t likely to be possibilities isn’t a case so much of what you can get away with as how you get away with it, and in this philosophy of wits the story gains its point and Dwan’s handling of it is excellent. He might not have gone to the extent of having a bank president crawling around the floor in his own home with a lion skin over him. Then, too, he neglects to say where Monte kept his little sister while he played the game of wits. A bit of detail which doesn’t greatly matter.

Walter Griggs, a bank messenger, is called a “boob” because of his stupid expression, unkempt appearance and perhaps because of his lowly existence. But Griggs has a method in his madness. He is tired of working for meagre wages to support himself and his motherless little sister, so under the guise of a “boob” he watches his chance to get hold of some real money.

In the meantime, as James Brown, he meets the bank president, who is struck by his resemblance to Griggs. Brown greatly interests the president by his wonderful tales of his adventures—all first-class lies—even to the extent of writing a book of them which is published at the request of the president.

Suddenly Griggs disappears and $25,000 is missing. Then James Brown becomes James Brown by day as well as by night until the district attorney puts him through a third degree in an attempt to confirm his suspicions that Brown is Griggs. James Brown receives $25,000 for false arrest. Griggs again appears at the bank, pleads aphasias and after getting the original $25,000 from the bank vault where he had placed it, he gives it to the president and is then fired. That is the end of Griggs, but James Brown marries the pretty stenographer and can well take care of his little sister on the attorney’s $25,000 and the receipts from his adventure book.

Author, Blue’s Name, Producer and Catchlines Should All Be Used

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This is rather unusual in theme and for that reason should be well received. And it isn’t likely that some of its vague possibilities will spoil its value as entertainment or detract from the interest provided by the dual characterization handled so admirably by Monte Blue. Those who have seen him in “The Jacklins” and “The Kentuckians” will probably want to see him in this. You can assure them they’ll like his work.

Announce it as Allan Dwan’s second for Associated Producers and recall his first, “The Forbidden Thing.” Mention that the story is an adaptation of Carl Clausen’s Saturday Evening Post story and use catchlines such as “Know what ‘The Perfect Crime’ is? Better look it up to be on the safe side. Go to the blank theater for the information.”
Simple In Idea But Has Fine Climax.  Carey Pleasing As Ever

Harry Carey in
"IF ONLY JIM"
Universal

DIRECTOR .......................... Jacques Jaccard
AUTHOR ............................. Philip V. Mighels
SCENARIO BY ......................... George C. Hull
CAMERAMAN .......................... Harry Fowler
AS A WHOLE...... Not as strong a vehicle as Carey usually has; action is good but it comes too late STORY...... All center around character played by Carey and a waif he finds, has fine climax DIRECTION...... Story isn't one that requires much directorial effort

PHOTOGRAPHY .......................... Good
LIGHTINGS ............................. All right CAMERA WORK .......................... Good
STAR..........Gives his usually good performance SUPPORT......All rough western types adequate INTERIORS ............................. Pretty western shots
EXTERIORS ............................. Correct
DETAIL ................................. All right
CHARACTER OF STORY....Caring for little boy he has found gives lazy Jim an incentive to work and be somebody

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ............ 4,635 feet

Harry Carey's latest is an adaptation of the novel "Bruiser Jim's Baby," and while it isn't as strong a vehicle as he is usually given, it is a satisfactory offering, clean and wholesome in idea. Action is lacking in the early reels which are devoted to Harry's efforts to bring the little fellow up properly, even going to the extent of holding church services. The last reel has some very good action, however, and there is a fight-to-a-finish climax that makes up, in a way, for what was missed earlier.

Carey never fails to show you a good fight some-time during the picture and you're about beginning to think he's going to disappoint you in "If Only Jim," when things start going and he not only shows some fancy gun play but also gives a good fist fight. The little boy is a bit more of a sober-sides than most children. He's a "cute" youngster, but a chap with some real boyish ways would have added a whole lot to the appeal from this angle.

The story is unfolded smoothly and the direction is quite all right but the picture isn't one which required any very serious efforts. A good western atmosphere has been secured and the usual barroom sets are used but not too often. There are some good bits of western country.

Jim Golden is noted for having good intentions, but they are always blocked by "if only——" One day Jim finds a little boy who has been abandoned by some Indians. At first Jim thinks the boy is a papoose but he finds the brown washes off. No trace is found of the child's folks and so he is known as Jim's kid. Jim and his crowd "a'lbout" to bring the kid up properly.

In the same town, is Miss Dot, who runs the post office. She has always tried to get Jim to give up his lazy ways and get busy with a mine on his property. Jim would have done it "if only——" But with the coming of parental duties, Jim decides to get busy at the mine. The kid is taken ill and Miss Dot is sent for. The next morning when Jim returns from a nearby town with a doctor, he is told that Parkey is planning to cheat him out of his claim. Jim starts out to "get" Parkey after he is told the kid will recover. He overpower Parkey and his crowd and returns to his cabin to find Parkey has beat him to it and is attacking Miss Dot. Jim thrashes Parkey and the last shot shows him with his arms around Dot and the kid.

You Can Always Depend Upon This Star For Satisfaction

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Where Harry Carey is popular they will be perfectly satisfied with "If Only Jim" and even, perhaps, where he is not so well known they will go out satisfied, because the finish is full of action and there is a good audience ending. Carey can always be depended upon for at least an average picture and most of the time they're better than that so it isn't necessary to go into detail as to how to put it over.

The star's name and catchlines should be sufficient to interest them. Say: "He was always going to work if only—— so they called him 'If Only Jim.' But one day he found an inspiration for work. See Harry Carey's latest and you'll know what it was he found."

It's also to be hoped Carey will write some more stories for himself, one like "Hearts Up," his previous effort.

Some Short Reels

"The High Sign"—Metro

Type of production: 2 reel comedy

Buster Keaton's newest product, and one that certainly furthers establishes him as one of the very best comic actors and delivers of original style in comedy. Eddie Kline and Keaton wrote this one, and they have again knocked off about double the number of new gags and tricks that are usually found in a two-reeler. If you play "Hard Luck" (Keaton's last one before this) and then show this, some people may not think "The High Sign" as funny, but because "Hard Luck" was a riot it ought to be a cinch to pack them in for this, and there will be mighty few who won't get a flock of laughs out of every piece of business in the picture. Buster gets mixed up with the toughest gang of cutthroats in the world, and is immediately assigned the duty of killing his sweetheart's father. Father has been warned of the danger and learning that Buster is a good shot, hires him for a bodyguard, so that Buster has sort of a "dual personality." The old man also is taking some chances on getting cornered, and he has his hands all chopped up by trap doors and sliding panels. This gives Buster a splendid chance to make use of his acrobatic ability when the big chase starts. It runs along very fast, and as smooth as clock work. Altogether a first-class comedy.

"Made in the Kitchen"—Mack Sennett-Associated Producers

Type of production: 2 reel comedy

This is another of the Mack Sennett two reel laugh getters and in case you can't guess what is "Made in the Kitchen" it may be well to try to get the story of the particular case. It's a girl being called "home brew." Most of the comedy gags come through the process of beer making. Billy Bevan and Louise Fazenda are the happy couple who have a youngster who is as much interested in his father's kitchen duty as pa is himself. There are a fine succession of laughs. The bottles start popping while the minister is calling and the baby spils some of the beer into the tea. It's a first-rate comedy offering which you will be sure to please them with.

"The Jockey"—Fox

Type of production: 2 reel comedy

Clyde Cook is the star of this, and both the piece and the star are absolutely and ridiculously funny. Cook has practically abandoned his sentimental ideas and has devoted himself to working out and putting over a whole flock of new gags that are all screamers. There isn't a dull minute in the whole comedy, and while Cook is by a long shot the funniest thing in it, the story itself, and nearly every bit of business is good for a laugh with any audience. It isn't necessary to try and tell what the gags are. The stuff is pulled so fast that some of it may fail to register with a few spectators, but it doesn't matter, because there is another stunt the next minute that will be sure to get them. Right off the bat there is a big laugh when Cook, as the jockey, is backed by a lot of money—and then the horse sits down on the track just as the race starts. When he gets up he races the wrong way. If you haven't hooked Cook's previous comedies, take a look at this one. It's a sure fire number.

"The Shadow of Suspicion"—Universal

Type of production: 2 reel western

The star of this one is Eileen Sedgwick, recently starred in the "Diamond Queen" serial. She is very much at home in the western type and makes the picture good entertainment on her own account. There is also in this one a good strong element of suspense and excitement, with the question of a mysterious bandit's identity hidden up to the very end. The star plays the daughter of a millionaire, and devotes herself to keep away from civilization, makes her believe him to be the mysterious masked robber who terrorizes the country. The hero comes to live with them, and turns out to be a secret service agent, whose poverty, and desire to keep away from civilization, makes her believe him to be the mysterious masked robber who terrorizes the country. The hero tries to save the outlaw, believing him to be her father, but it later turns out that the old man is also hunting the bandit. It should go well if they westerns.

"No License"—Universal

Type of production: 1 reel comedy

This one features Billy Fletcher, a diminutive comedian, whose work is along the same lines as Bobby Vernon's, of Christie Comedies. Fletcher gets some of it over well, and at other times is not so good. There is a whole lot of material in the piece, however, and it is probable that Fletcher makes it as funny as anyone could. It is very mildly amusing most of the way through, but never develops any really big laughs. The theme is an overworked one of a young fellow who wishes to marry a girl whose father is determined that he shall not. When father leaves for a sea trip, the hero and heroine escape and board the same ship, planning to be married by the ship's captain. The comedy centers around their attempts to keep out of father's way, and finally to get married with his knowledge. There may be enough stuff to put it over in small houses, but it will be hard to satisfy the majority of audiences with it.

"Screen Snapshots"—No. 20—C. B. C. Film Sales

Type of production: 1 reel fan magazine

This issue offers a number of more or less intimate peeps at some of the very, very famous film folk, and some not so famous, but quite interesting. First of all, Wesley Barry is introduced to the city editor of a Los Angeles newspaper, and the latter gives up his job, while Wesley does a little editing. Then there are a few shots of Billy West rehearsing scenes for a comedy. Next are shown some bathes of Universal City zoo out for a motor ride after a day; work. Jack Snyder then shows how he achieves the character make-up of a Mexican bandit, and an Arabian Sheik. The next is "Scrambled Wives in the Making," and gives a few close-ups of Marguerite Clark and her director in the studio. Doralina, Tom Mix, Ruth Roland, and Larry Semen next do a few shots for sweet charmers, and there are some of D. W. Griffith directing a scene from "Way Down East." This brings before the camera, Richard Barthellness, Lillian Gish, and others in the cast, and should prove highly entertaining to all raffish fans. It's a good number of the series.

"Gum Shoe Work"—Fox

Type of production: 1 reel animated cartoon

Bud Fisher has grabbed another funny idea for Mutt and Jeff to play with, and the result is about as amusing as a cartoon can be. Which is to say that most people will get many good laughs out of it. They're detectives in this one, and they go on the trail of some bomb plotters. They locate a suspicious package on a window ledge, which "ticks" like an ceasefire. Then Mutt gets caught in a bucket in which they have dumped the package, and the rest is all a big laugh while Jeff tries to get his partner out. Pretty near sure-fire stuff if they like cartoons.

"A Daughter of the Law"—C. B. C. Film Sales

Type of production: 2 reel western

This is classed as a western because it is that type of picture, but the scene is actually in the mountains of Tennessee. Grace Cunard is starred in the offering, and she also wrote and directed it. There's a pretty good element of suspense all the way through for a short feature, and on the whole it classes as better than average. The story in general concerns prohibition, and there may develop a somewhat split sympathy on the part of some spectators between the villains, who are making home brew in large quantities, and the hero, who destroys it. There is also some fear for a while that Miss Cunard, as the young secret service operator, is going to tell the revenue officers where the stills are, but she doesn't. She goes to the mountains in the disguise of an artist to clean out the bootleggers, among whom is the hero. Her identity is discovered and it is about to be killed, but the murder never saves her. Having fallen in love with her the hero then abandons whiskey running and breaks up the stills. A good number if they like westerns.
Short Reels

"Stuffed Lions"—Universal
Type of production: 2 reel comedy

This one employs the same general methods of getting laughs as the other comedy comedies featuring the trained lions. But besides that, Chuck Reisner, who wrote and directed it, has supplied some new gags with a prohibition angle, that are good for a number 1 laugh, and the lion business is pretty near sure fire. All of which makes the number a very satisfactory comedy offering. The first reel doesn't afford an over amount of fun, but when in the second the lions get loose in the office of a bootlegging taxidermist, things happen fast and furiously, and the animals furnish a lot of funny chase stuff. All the animals in the taxidermist's shop look innocent enough in their stuffed condition, but it develops that each is filled with a different kind of hootch, which they produce when squeezed. There are enough laughs in the second part to make up for the mild comedy of the first.

"Prince Pistacho"—Pathé
Type of production: 1 reel comedy

This is a Vanity Fair comedy, featuring Eddie Boland and the Vanity Fair girls. Also it is the best of the series reviewed in some time. They caught a very funny idea for it, and Boland puts the stuff over in a way that will be sure to get several big laughs. He's a plumber in the first part, and in looking for a leak in a gas pipe, he is blown sky high on the Gandhi Isle, or some such East Indian place, and is mistaken for the expected Prince. The princess is on hand with her maidens, thus giving plenty of opportunity for display of the Vanity Fair girls. Eddie has a bad time getting along with an Indian hypnotist and the whole thing is pretty good stuff. Every time Eddie starts making progress with one of the girls, the hypnotist makes him do something terrible, spoiling his chances with the young lady. You can feel safe in booking this one.

"Out O' Luck"—Universal
Type of production: 2 reel western

In his last few pictures, Hoot Gibson seems to have been drifting into a lighter story vein, and the result is a pleasing difference from the general run of such pictures. In this one he offers another "comedy western" that registers pretty good entertainment all the way through. The idea is funny, and Hoot possesses a sense of comedy values that puts it over in fine shape. He has a new leading lady in this one, who isn't as attractive as the last one, but is well enough, and Hoot carries the biggest part of the picture anyway. Gibson is "out o' luck" at the opening; no job, and nothing to eat. A fellow with a lunatic asylum has allowed some of the lunatics to escape and the guards in searching for them inform Hoot and two girl campers of the escape. Hoot later wanders into the girls' camp and both parties think the other fellow is a "nut." They come up with a lot of funny business with each trying to humor the other. It turns out all right when Hoot captures the real lunatic and gets a job and a girl.

"The Ventriloquist"—Fox
Type of production: 1 reel animated cartoon

This is a Mutt and Jeff that is fully up to the comedy standard of these cartoons. There are the usual number of laughs for those who enjoy Bud Fisher's humor, and the comedy of the kind that is of almost certain appeal, in all of them. This one finds Jeff a ventriloquist and Mutt with an idea for capitalizing the accomplishment. With a mongrel dog they enter a concert hall and Jeff hides. The dog at once begins to talk, and Mutt finally sells him for $500. The barkeep gets wise, however, and Mutt and Jeff are knocked stiff.

"Big Bob"—Universal
Type of production: 2 reel Western

Jack Perrin is the star of this one. It's just an average western story that is helped out by a lot of high speed action. Perrin has many qualifications as the leading actor, but he does some of the western stuff all wrong. He is always too smoothly shaven and his hair is too neatly brushed to look like a rough and ready cowboy. And he exhibits drawing room manners on several occasions. However, he puts up a good scrap, and there is an exciting climax when the villain attacks him from behind, and is killed with the help of a couple by a stranger, who captures a notorious desperado. The latter escapes and in revenge kills the hero's mother. The ranger then vows vengeance and finally locates the villain. The big fight follows, in which the hero is helped by a girl, with whom he falls in love. There isn't any time wasted in the telling, and on account of its pep the offering should prove satisfactory to western fans at least.

"Trigger Trail"—Universal
Type of production: 2 reel Western

This is a pretty good short feature, with a big element of suspense and plenty of gun and fist fights. The star, Jack Perrin, isn't always convincingly western, on account of his well groomed appearance, but he handles his gun and his horse in the approved fashion. Also the story has a little more to it than the average one of its kind, and the whole is benefitted by excellent locations and good photography. A little girl playing opposite the star, by the name of Louise Lorraine, is quite charming to look at. The hero is a sheriff, who goes to the aid of a neighboring sheriff in pursuit of a bad bandit. He finally captures the villain single handed, after being thought to be the rest of the posse. The bandit escapes from jail and steals the hero's adopted daughter, but is finally again caught by the hero. The necessary excitement is there throughout most of both reels, and you can feel reasonably sure of satisfying audiences that like westerns, with this one.

"High And Dry"—C. B. C. Film Sales Co.
Type of production: 2 reel comedy

This is the latest of the "Hallroom Boys" comedies. The featured performers are Sid Smith, Harry McCoy, and Polly Moran. They doped up a new gag and gags to go across easily, and a good proportion of the business all the way through registers, with several big laughs scattered around. There is one at the very beginning when one of the boys blows up a pair of rubber gloves, throws them in the water, and gets the other boy to save the drowning man while he makes off with the fair lady. Possibly the drunk stuff is overworked but most of it will be pretty sure fire. The boys get in some frightful predicaments in the hotel to which they return full of home brew. Their troubles eventually lead them onto the roof of the building. Some very clever photography in this part. All the stunts, while humorous, are nevertheless very real when the two boys dangle in midair, and slip, and almost but not quite fall into the street, visible some dozen stories below. Sid Smith and Harry McCoy both get into a mess. Sid, remember him as "Sheriff Nell," has a bit that has a couple of laughs. It should be a satisfactory offering for most audiences.

"Adventures of Bill and Bob"—Pathé
Type of production: Series of 1 reel nature stories

This series is quite a departure and decidedly a novelty in one reel pictures. Both in subject and in treatment there is a lot of originality. Each reel is devoted to various trapping and camping experiences of two boys, who are the Bill and Bob of the title. There is no suggestion of serial action, every number being complete in itself. They are to be released once a month, which should be just about the right interval to make the whole series acceptable. The first "Trapping," is a story while humorous, are nevertheless very real when the two boys dangle in midair, and slip, and almost but not quite fall into the street, visible some dozen stories below. Sid Smith and Harry McCoy both get into a mess. Sid, remember him as "Sheriff Nell," has a bit that has a couple of laughs. It should be a satisfactory offering for most audiences.

The Trade Commission making investigation—Posters Attract Attention

It is reported in film circles that the Federal Trade Commission is actively operating, securing information relative to reissues on the part of one company at least operating in violation of the rule laid down by the Commission. This company is said to be The American Film Co. of Chicago, which issued William Russell and Mary E. Owen's subjects made some years ago.

The Trade circle itself is said to be the institution based upon the paper as the subject of the investigation. The Lithos distribution, however, is nothing more than an advertisement to warn exhibitors that the release is a reissue. The Commission laid stringent rules relative to what constitutes the distributor or producer issuing reissues, to the exhibitor and public, particularly in the Lasso decision and that of the Hart decision against W. H. Prod.

By International Magazine Co. is Charge of Authors' League—Editorial in American Paper

The Authors' League of America, Inc., through its executive committee, has condemned the International Magazine Co., which publishes magazines, including William Randolph Hearst's, either controls or owns for speculating in the film rights of stories by well-known authors.

It is claimed that this is being done through another Hearst corporation, the International Story Co., which, it is maintained, was formed especially for the purpose of dickering in film rights. The publications referred to by the Authors' League are Cosmopolitan, Good Housekeeping, Hearst's and Harper's Bazar, all of which are published by the International Magazine Co.

The singers were dressed as our father and brother and as Sherlock in the photoplay. A party effect was gained by a cloud machine. As the rose, white clouds drifted up, the party gradually grew and at the finish the lights dimmed, except those in the windows, while a gentle rain fell.

—Here is a brief outline of a sign put up by H. E. Newberry, publicity director for H. Ince, in connection with "Lying Lips," at Barbee's. The first step was the securing of a pretty usherettes. They were in white trousers and velvet jackets. The next step was the use of a prologue called, "Of the Ages." It was in a modern form, six famous women being introduced in verse monologue. On the opening night, consisting of a set of three animated and continually scene stills from the picture, of the stars, really in front of the film. Following the interest in the novel star, there was a film in this manner in the London Daily and Examiner conducted a contest on, "Is Falsehood justified," and also carried a story on a lawn in a recreation interview with Florence.

Suit Dismissed
And Court Makes Important Decision Regarding Films of People in Public Eye

A decision of importance to film producers is their use of the pictures of persons who have figured in some way in events has been made by Supreme Court Justice Newburger in dismissing the suit of Carl Wetig against the Foursquare Pictures because of the use of his name and picture in the 8th Episode of "The Eagle's Eye." The plaintiff alleged that he aided the U. S. Secret Service and the New York police in convicting Lieut. Payne, and that the use of his name and picture without his consent damaged him. The defendant distributed the serial, Wetig admitted, that he had furnished the information and his picture to a newspaper reporter and that the newspaper published the article relating to the plaintiff's connection with the 8th Episode. Justice Newburger said: "The representation of this plaintiff was published in a single set of films, to be distributed at the same time to different parts of the country as a news item. It was interesting when first exhibited. The fact that these films were widely distributed, so as to be seen by many people, cannot make the offense any greater than would be the offense in a newspaper with a large circulation publishing the same picture or the same names in a single issue. The fact that the picture may have been seen by the same person more than once would not condemn the publication, because a single issue of a newspaper is often seen several times by the same person. The exhibitor of these films, with the interest of the public in view, is not going to see that any news item after the interest in the item has died out." The court says that in view of the plaintiff's testimony and the publication of the newspaper article it is apparent that the picture complained of in the 8th Episode of "The Eagle's Eye" was a portrayal of actual events and for that reason the suit is dismissed.

Film Rights Forced

It is stated that 95% of the American magazines accord authors treatment which is just. Regarding the Hearst publications, it is charged that stories by nationally known authors are refused unless Hearst secures the film rights with them. This, the committee states, has caused authors like Conno Hamilton, Louis Joseph Vance, Arthur Somers Roche and Rupert Hughes to seek other markets for their wares.

Options on film rights, the committee states, are secured "at prices usually below ruling market values and offered for sale at terms paying good profits to the holder of the option, but not to the author, and the sales being made before that option price has been paid to him."

"It is believed," the report accompanying the resolutions says, "that most of America's leading authors will refuse to deal longer with what may be termed an unfair shop, and that those at present under contract will refuse to renew while such conditions as are condemned by the Executive Committee are still in existence. We are the controlling body of the League and this will be the policy of the League."

New York American commented editorially on the resolution stating that the Authors' League did not know what it was talking about.

Newspaper Opinions

"What Every Woman Knows"—F. P. L. Rivoli

AMERICAN— Very reverently, artfully and happily. Every fanatic in the city can see this.

WORLD—It is another of the season’s best phonoplasms, and credit for its success in film form can go to one excepting the director.

HERALD—"What Every Woman Knows" is a Scotch mist as a movie.

GLOBE—This director has a facile gift for using a celebrated story as the basis of a film which is agreeable and picturesque, even though it has little relation to the author’s intellectual interests.

SUN— Just as convincing as the stage production.

AMERICAN— Perhaps the original Barrie play was more convincing than the screen version, but the latter certainly is not. There is a lot of nonsense in the picture.

TELEGRAM—The whisper of the production, its touches of pathos and its keen character studies as projects. The M. D. Miller make it one of the finest of the season.

SUN— Result of an engraving experiment, less effective than the play in the theater, but not at all stripped of appeal.

Parish Representative--Le Film, 14 Rue Montmartre.

"Guile of Women"—Goldwyn Capitol

TIMES—It is the purely wordy story which gives Rogers only occasional opportunities to show his peculiar expressiveness and personality.

AMERICAN—The subtitles, terse and few, help to keep the Westerns in their place, and carry enough sympathetic sentiment to keep all alone. Analyzing the whole thing, there isn’t much to the picture outside of the subtitles.

TRIBUNE—It cannot be said that "The Guile of Women" is specially suitable for Will Rogers, but he manages the most opportunies and provides some fine characterizations.

WORLD—The film in which he appears this week takes him so far from home that he may never return, but all will hope for the best.

JOURNAL— Winnie and humanly humorous is the performance of the Capitol.

"The Old Swimmin’ Hole"—1st Nat’l Strand

TIMES— A picture for everybody.

The picture is as moral as the most careful, or rather, the censor could wish, and yet is not dull.  And it is entirely pictorial, without subtitles or captions.

AMERICAN—The picture has been well directed, with a bit of humor running through it. The cast is excellent, and the whole production is...

TRIBUNE—The virtue of the picture is the novelty but not the superiority.

WORLD—Not one subtitle in Ray’s new play. It is "The Old Swimmin’ Hole," a departure on the screen.  This is an achievement that not only challenges the excessive opinions of such directors as Cecil B. DeMille, but rides the picture play of its most aggravating and cumbersome burden of the past.

HERALD— The innovation of practically dispensing with formal subtitles has resulted in a picture that manages, with entrancing photographic embellishment, to be a bit of literature.

MAYORAL—A camera in fine humor has brought these scenes to the screen, and with it has come the joy as yet not enjoyed...

GLOBE—"The Old Swimmin’ Hole" is at the Strand as a film entirely without subtitles. This is supposed to prove something. For us it proves that a one-act play can make a pretty picture and that Charles Ray is joy forever in his immovable photographic boyhood.

SUN— The perfect member of the rural types.  It carries along the story of a fatherless family. It is a very good film, and much has been done here in the making.

MAIL—There is something so refreshing, so clear and so human about it that the spectator lives either in retrospect or in every with every act of the characters. It would be hard to conceive any one so eminently fitted to lead the players in a film of this sort...

TELEGRAM— No end of delight.  The plot is obvious, but the story is brimming with heart interest.

WORLD—It has added photographic of the best and the grace and shading of the old-time scenes. And more than ever heDefinitely the very considerable contribution of the direction.

We want S-H-X MEN

One of the oldest-established companies in the producing field requires the immediate services of six first-class men to act as FOREIGN REPRESENTATIVES.

EXCHANGE MANAGERS SHOULD APPLY FOR THESE POSITIONS

The six men we want are, today, probably Managers or Assistant Managers in large and reputable film exchanges. They must, at least, have had some sound film training. We do not want dabblers—we want only steady, reliable men who know the business thoroughly and want to get on it.

ACCOUNTING EXPERIENCE AN ADVANTAGE BUT NOT A FIRST Necessity

The six men we want must understand figures. They do not need to be trained accountants, but they must be able to make intelligent use of financial statements.

SHOULD SPEAK AT LEAST ONE FOREIGN LANGUAGE—FRENCH OR SPANISH PREFERRED

The most can be got out of these six positions in the foreign field by those applicants who have a good working knowledge of either French or Spanish and who are willing to perfect themselves in that language.

WE WANT OLD HEADS ON YOUNG SHOULDERS

We are willing to accept young men for these six jobs but would prefer men over 25—either married or single. We want live wires, but we do not want them of such high pressure that they’ll short-circuit and burn out.

THEY MUST KNOW HOW TO HANDLE MEN

Proven ability to handle men and get results without friction will be a big asset for the men who are going to fill these six good jobs. If you can point to something you have done in this line, so much the better.

EACH AND EVERY ONE OF THESE SIX FOREIGN POSITIONS HAS A QUICK AND A BIG FUTURE

The foreign market of this company is ready to give the six men who land these positions real and quick futures. They will have to work hard, but they will have their rewards in good salaries and in futures which will be bounded solely by their own ability and integrity of purpose. These jobs are not for four-flushers or quarter-horses, but permanent connections for energetic, purposeful men who want to develop big, solid, worth-while places for themselves.

Measure Pending in Missouri—Similar to New York State Law
(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Jefferson City, Mo.—The Senate has approved a billcalling for proprietors of picture theaters when they invest in funds with firms and are forced to put up money in advance and fail to receive the films. The Senate passed, 34-10, the bill in committee of judiciary, but it was so as to interfere with the purport of the law.

Briefly, it is proposed that when such exhibitors are forced to advance money for films that are not ready to be delivered, the money would be placed on the books of the county where the pro-

The measure is similar to that now existing in New York State, and which was passed after determined efforts on the part of Sydney S. Cohen's organization.

Mr. Cohen has often stated that his organization would fight for similar bills in various states. An effort was made yesterday to ascertain just what had been done along these lines, but Cohen was not at his office.

Rights Not Sold

The office of Richard Walton Tully, author of "The Bird of Paradise," is located at 109-105 N. Second Ave. It is the only office of Sydydey S. Cohen's organization.

Mr. Cohen has often stated that his organization would fight for similar bills in various states. An effort was made yesterday to ascertain just what had been done along these lines, but Cohen was not at his office.

Working on Second

Salient Films, Inc., have started work on their second production starring Muriel Orsich. It is cal-ed "The Yeggs". The Yeggs Open. Enthralled studio has been leased and beginning April 1, the company will work in the Claymont studio which has been leased for one year. Harold Forshay has been signed for a series of 10 pictures. The third picture will be "The Green Trail". May Work in East
(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Los Angeles—Anita Yezierska's "Hungry Hearts" stories, which have been whirled into shape by Julian Josephson, will probably be produced in the East by Goldwyn. A number of East Side scenes are necessary.

At Goldwyn, it was stated that exter-ors would probably be made in New York and interiors on the coast. Definite plans for the production have not as yet crystallized.

Alvin Wyckoff is now associate editor of The American Cinematograther, the official organ of the American Society of Cinematogographers.

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

Minneapolis—The management of the Lyric and the St. Paul Capitol made freckles the basis of their exceptions of Marshall Neilan's "Ditsy." In Minneapolis, Manager Perry of the New Lyric had everyone in town counting the freckles on Wesley Barry's face. In conjunction with the Daily News he offered $10 to every person who could count Wesley's freckles, reproduced in big pictures from day to day during the run of the picture. The Capitol at St. Paul started an avalanche of publicity for "Ditsy" when an advertisement in the newspaper appeared reading as follows:

"Attention, all you freckled faced youngsters. Here's a chance to conmercialize your freckles. Tomorrow night every St. Paul boy or girl who has 100 freckles or more will be addmitted free to the Capitol to see Wesley Barry in "Ditsy."

As a result over two hundred children were admitted free—but their parents came and paid. Several good newspaper stories resulted.

Creston, la.—A coffin in the window of an undertaking's establishment hardly comes up to the standard for an attractive display designed to get people into a theater, but manager Metzer of the Strand used it in a successful manner in connection with the showing of "The Splendid Hazard." The coffin was a black one and plenty of crepe was draped around. A sign printed in white letters on a black background hung above the casket. It read: "The management of the Strand offers $20 to any colored person who will dare to face the 'Splendid Hazard' of sleeping in this casket over night and riding in it to the cemetary the following morning. The stout created talk, and the talk was mostly cheerful and the casket lost all of its gruesomeness in the repetition of the stories why 'Rustus' or "Sally" didn't require that particular $20."

Omaha, Neb.—Manager John Love-

ridge of the Rialto and R. C. Gary, cartoonist and exploitation agent of the Famous Players-Lasky exchange here, put over "Heliotrope" in great style. Gary drew a series of six cartoon teasers, having to do with the mysteries, coming of "Heliotrope Harry" to Omaha, and they were run one a day in the Omaha papers for the week before the picture opened.

Billings, Mont.—The Babcock Theater has begun the publication of the running time on feature attractions in all of its advertisements, and reports that holds overs from one performance to another are nearly negligible, as a result.

The Robert H. Davis Corp. has sold "Children of Night," by Max Brand, to Fox Film. It is understood William Russel will be starred.

Action Against Mayflower Alleging Salary Arrears and Breach of Contract

Walsh filed suit in the New York Supreme Court on Monday against Mayflower Photoplay Corp., for $10,000 for salary due as director and told he has paid in full the property for $235,000 for a building in New York. He also filed suit for $35,000 for a new building in Los Angeles. In the Courts
Jerome Storm has filed suit in the Supreme Court against the Amusement Corp. for $3,500 alleged to be due him as two weeks pay for services as film director from Dec. 15 last.

A jury before Justice Schumck in the Supreme Court gave a judgment for $1,834 for William Burns, Inc., for rugs, furniture and pictures leased to the Johnson & Hopkins Co., for the company's New York Island studies. The latter alleged an overpayment of $1,691.

Justice Ford has issued a temporary stay preventing Florence Winter Stokes, author of "No Man's Woman," from selling or otherwise distributing the picture except through the Associated Photoplays, Inc.

O'Brien, Malevinsky and Driscoll are the attorneys for Mrs. Stokes and Robert Spear for Associated Photoplays.

Hiram Abrams has filed an answer in the Supreme Court in the suit of his former partner, Bennie F. Schubert, in which he has claimed that he has not been accounted to Schubert for the profits of the film in which George Beban appeared, except as to moneys drawn by Mrs. Schubert and $2,650 drawn by the defendant's wife. As to the plays, "Among the Girls" and "The Challenge," in which they bought a $2,000 interest in each, Abrams said they lost money and Schubert has not paid his share of the loss.

No Decision Reached (Special to WID'S DAILY)
Washington — Debate extending over a period of three hours marked the hearing before the district commissioners on censorship on Monday. At the close of the hearing the commissioners asked both sides to submit their views in writing, but did not indicate when a decision would be reached.

D. W. Griffith led the industry's case, saying in part: "Censorship is a thing of kings. It is not for free people. It is dangerous when one man can say what we may or may not think. Who among us is qualified to say with finality what is wrong or what is right? David Copperfield is a story of seduction, but it is a great novel." "Hamlet" has five murders in it, but it is one of Shakespeare's greatest plays. If you provide a strict censorship of the movies, the press will be the next and it will go on and on until finally the man on the corner will be there to exercise an espionage over what innocent citizens may have to say to each other. The greatest board of censorship is the unappointed and unpaid American people.

The M. P. T. O. was represented by Sydney S. Cohen, Julian Blykawski and Harry Crandall, who spoke in charge of the matter locally. Congressmen Pinkham of Massachusetts also spoke against censorship.

Short Reel Deal
Warner Bros. take over Special Pictures—Release Through Educal—Another Studio

Warner Bros. have just concluded an important deal in short reels. It is a two-cornered affair involving Special Pictures Corp. and the Educational Exchanges, Inc., as a distributing company.

Under the terms of the deal Warner Bros. take over from Special Pictures three stars who are under contract with that organization, produce their comedies and turn them over to Educational for distribution. The stars are Chester Conklin, Louise Fa-zenda and Ford Sterling. Present plans call for an output of 13 comedies a year.

To take care of the increased production activities, Warner Bros. have taken over the Jesse D. Hamp-ton house at 7000 Hollywood Blvd., Hollywood, Calif., where some of the companies will work. Warners have a studio of their own at Sunset and (Continued on Page 4)

$160,000 Raised in New York
S. L. Rothafel submitted his report on the Greater New York Hoover Drive at the Capitol yesterday. The capital was raised on a list with $10,465.47 to its credit and the Plaza is next with $11,467.75. The total amount raised in the city was $160,000.

C. C. Petijohn, of the National Hoover Committee, announced that he had turned over to the committee $50,000 as its first installment in the national quota of the industry.

Famous Players yesterday announced that Mildred Harris has been engaged for a role in Cecil De Mille's next production. WID'S DAILY earlier in the week published an article from the Oakland Tribune to that effect, but at the time it was denied by Paramount.

Von Herberg has refused to make a statement. H. B. Wright, formerly secretary and manager of the circuit, is taking a position as house manager in one of the Jensen and Von Herberg theaters.

Writ Against U. F. A.
(London, Eng.—It is reported here from Berlin that the U. C. I. (Unione Cinematografica Italiane) have issued a writ against the U. F. A. on the ground that the latter company has not fulfilled its contract to take the Italian pictures.

It has been variously reported from abroad that the U. F. A., the U. C. I. and Famous Players were in a triangular deal for a reciprocal policy of distribution. Later it was reported the deal so far as Famous Players was concerned was off. Eugene Zukor is now abroad and it would not prove surprising if negotiations were again revived along the same lines.

is unjust and unfair to a great industry whose representatives have been assured in Washington such a course would be taken and we insist and demand that the property of motion picture exporters and importers be protected against such confiscatory action as is announced in the notice of sale complained of.

On Dec. 22 WID’S DAILY stated: "Imported films must be cleared through the Custom House within 48 hours after their arrival at this port. The result has been that the films have been piled up downtown. Under the present arrangement they will be sold at public auction after the stipulated period expires. It was learned yesterday that over 1,000,000 ft. of foreign-made films were sold the other day at public auction."

Alexander Answers A. M. P. A.

William Alexander of the Alexander Co., distributors of the "Devil Angel" in Greater New York, said yesterday: "Relative to the style of lithographs used for the production, The Devil's Angel, I will state that the consensus of opinion among the exhibitors is that the lithographic work on this subject is as clean a lot of work as has been gotten out on any feature of the past year. The report made by the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers must have been made by one of their members from hearsay."

Ray's Trip Put Off

Arthur S. Kane has received word that Charles Ray has decided to postpone his New York visit until December. It had been expected that Ray would make the trip early this spring, but he wants to be farther advanced in production before he signs his First National contract before leaving the studios.

In his next picture, "Scrap Iron," Ray makes his debut as a director.

Brady on Coast

The following wire was received yesterday from Glenn Harper, secretary of the Theater Owners of Southern California and Arizona:

A stormy session of representatives from 17 moving picture organizations was carried into the small hours of the morning during which the delegation from the Theater Owners of Southern California withdrew at the proposal of the formation of the National Association, but returned upon the dissolution of that organization formed locally two years ago, whose activities are confined strictly and absolutely to state legislative matters. Brady is in no way responsible for this meeting. His reception here was met with opposition by exhibitors who stand 100% behind the Theater Owners of America and Sydney S. Cohen.

"The Theater Owners of Southern California demand an authentic report in your publication of Brady's activities while in Los Angeles. He met with no success with exhibitors, who repudiated and denounced him and the N. A. M. P. I."

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Los Angeles—A meeting held at the L.A. Athletic Club last evening, composed of representatives of 15 branches of the industry, organized plans for the revival of the Affiliated Picture Interests originally formed two years ago. The organization is now to combat blue laws and censorship.

Quite a discussion occurred early in the meeting when William A. Brady, who was a guest, was asked to speak. Glenn Harper of the T.O. of South Cal., wanted to know if the organization was to be local or national. He therewith returned later to join the proposed body, which he learned was to be local in scope.

Sydney S. Cohen was advised by wire yesterday that Harper's unit had subscribed its quota of $2,500 to the national treasury.

George Fitzmaurice and the cast for "Experience" have returned from Savannah and St. Augustine, where exteriors were taken.

In the Courts

Rever has applied to the Supreme Court for an accounting of the December 16th National Film Corp., David Fellers, and David P. Howells, for an accounting of the receipts on 'The Son of Tarzan,' and for an injunction restraining the defendants from continuing to exhibit the film, at the time he is paid the sums he is due.

He claims that he agreed with the Film to direct the film at the rate of $1,000 a week and 12% of the gross. Mr. Howells agreed to see the film and pay him his share of the receipts. He says that the actual cost of the film was only $106,000 instead of $400,000, as represented, and that the payment was already made in full.

He said that Mr. Howells had received $176,000, but that contracts are still being negotiated by Mr. Howells before conversations will be held with the company's representative to settle the dispute.

A copy of the above letter was forwarded to the Famous Players-Lasky Corp. for comment. An official of the company made the following announcement:

"There is no comment to make about the admission price in St. Louis theaters."

Houdini Secures Offices

The Houdini Pictures Corp., the formation of which was announced yesterday, has been secured on the first floor of the Courthouse Bldg.

Harry Houdini stated yesterday that he would make four pictures a year, the first to be made in the east. While abroad Houdini shot 10,000 ft. film which he will use in future productions.

Going to Youngstown

Thomas Meighan has left for Youngstown, O., to make a personal appearance at the Colonial theater. Meighan has consented to accept $1,000 for the appearance, but he will turn over the money equally to an orphan asylum and the Actors' Fund.

Harding Acted as Agent

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Kansas City, Mo.—Samuel Harding has not purchased "The County Fair" for Missouri, Kansas, Iowa and Nebraska, but he acted as agent for Ralph Simmons and Harry Taylor, who will distribute the picture under the firm name of the S. and T. Film Co., with offices in the Dorian Theater Bldg.

Cutting Prices

A number of St. Louis exhibitors have sent to WID'S DAILY the following letter:

"The Famous Players-Lasky Corp. are asking the exhibitors around the country to uphold the higher price of admission. They do not do as they preach. Enclosed you will find clippings of the Criterion theater that formerly charged 50c and now reduced their price to 30c. The same theater ran a picture a full week, now it runs two pictures a week."

"We also enclose clippings of the Delmonte theater which charged 30c admission and reduced to 20c. If they cannot get the high price of admission in their theaters, why do they ask the little show man to raise his price? Probably to put him out of business is one of the reasons.

"How can we pay high rental on films when the first run theaters are reducing their price 20c on one jump? It surely is going to effect the business in St. Louis. We are sorry that a big company like the Famous Players-Lasky Corp. is starting the ball rolling in our town."

Attatched to this letter were two newspaper clippings, one concerning the reduced scale at the Delmonte as noted in the letter, and the second an advertisement of the Criterion with notice of the reduction in prices.

"Carnival" Shown in London

London, Eng. — Alliance Film's first picture, "Carnival," was trade shown here recently. It is an ambitious picture, made by Harley Knoles, and although the action is very slow in the earlier reels it contains some very fine dramatic and spectacular stuff.

A lot of scenes were made in Venice. Matheson Lang and Hilda Bayley play their original stage roles in the film. The known film ma stated regarding the pictures that it should do a good business in this country and would be a good feature for the states if it is trimmed.

Wenger Resigns

John Wenger, art director of the Capitol theater, has resigned. The settings in the picture at that theater will be done under direct supervision of S. L. Rothafel.

Brunston Sts. in Hollywood capable of accommodating four companies. Just what units will operate here remains to be worked out later. The Monte Banks comedies for Federated release will, however, be made at the present Warner plant.

In all likelihood and in order to avoid conflict with the present Special Pictures output which is handled through Federated exchanges, the future series of comedies will be produced under the brand name of Warner Bros.

Definite information could not be secured yesterday as to what happens to the existing productions of Special Pictures. It is understood that Federated will continue to handle what product it has. This includes 12 Comedians, 10 Sunset Burrel Scenics, 4 Milburne Moranti comedies, 6 Claypains in Mud, 5 Comlásics and 2 Chester Conkin comedies. These pictures were made while Special had its own exchanges. They were later turned over to Federated and several additional comedies made for direct Federated release. Fazenda has not as yet made any comedies for Special.

Warner's are incidentally going ahead with the formation of their permanent feature organization with William Nigh as director and Harry Raplo as business manager. A deal is now on for a star who will appear in four pictures a year.

Earl W. Harmon of Educational stated yesterday that all three stars would work in the same comedies, making them all-star affairs. Mr. Harmon was of the opinion that they would make "some comedies."

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Los Angeles — The Warner Bros.- Special Pictures deal means that the former will take over in its entirety the Special Pictures producing organization. C. C. Craig, business manager of Special, is still with the company according to finally straightened out its affairs.

It is understood that the Hellman interests, who are in back of Special Pictures, have already spent $400,000 on the company and that $100,000 is available to Warners for production activities and for the purpose of placing the organization on a paying basis.

Joe Horwitz will state right "Dol-

Charges Monopoly

Paul Cromelin Questions Brulatour’s Motives in Asking 30% Duty on Imported Raw Stock

Paul H. Cromelin, president of Inter-Ocean, on behalf of his company has filed a brief with Chairman Fordney of the House Ways and Means Committee in which he charges that the Eastman Kodak Co. is seck-ing to “further control and dominate the industry by making it difficult, if not impossible, to procure the products of any concern which attempts to compete.”

Cromelin takes exception to the state taken by Mr. Brulatour, Mr. Brulatour tells the Eastman Kodak distributor who,
as noted, appeared before the committee seeking a 30% ad valorem duty on imported raw stock. Cromelin’s brief has attached to it a memorandum from the Gevaert Co. of America, Inc., which states that celluloid, the most important item entering into the manufacture of stock, is purchased in this country and shipped to Belgium.

Cromelin says in his brief, in part:

Smith Back from Sweden

Guy Crosswell Smith, head of the firm bearing his name, has returned from a short trip abroad during which he visited Scandinavia.

Mr. Smith found conditions in Sweden satisfactory on the whole, with a number of excellent foreign film productions. Sweden, according to Mr. Smith, is progressing rapidly in production and when that country makes pictures of a lighter vein, Smith thinks Swedish films will offer stern competition in this country.

"With the entire European market taken from them," said Smith yesterday,
"it is natural that Scandinavian audiences should be critical. They do not like a considerable number of the themes used in our productions. They prefer heavier material."

Mr. Smith said that while he did not have time to go to Germany, he was advised that there was an enormous amount of production under way there.
With The Independents

It was reported yesterday that Federal franchise holders were contemplating opening six additional exchanges. A man closely identified with Federal stated that he believed this was true and that the move was being contemplated by various franchise holders for their respective territories.

Way Behind Us, Says Standing

Rose Shulsinger, is in receipt of an interesting letter from Wyndham Standing, new in London. "I am over here on holiday and enjoying myself immensely, but British films are not for me. In my humble opinion they are ten years behind America; they do not go out after the big stuff but prefer to spend $12,000 on a picture. And they hit the 'screening' if they are not sold anything. At present there is a strong prejudice against American made films, but the movie fans still ask for them, and know the difference. The studios are equipped, (to a certain degree), with Kiek, Cooper-Hewitt and Sun arcs. They use a hard English, (Westminster), light for overhead, which is useful. Their printing and developing is done by American standards."

Standing's last picture here before leaving for London was "Bride's Play," which will be an early summer release.

Repeal Fails

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Pierre, S. D.—Efforts to repeal the blue laws now on the statute books have failed. Following the defeat of the Wagner bill, which would have accomplished this, a motion was made to reconsider the measure.

Attorney General Payne recently announced that if efforts to repeal the law fail, he would launch a campaign of enforcement. Every effort is being made by exhibitors to co-operate with forces in the legislature who seek repeal of the law.

A. M. P. A. Gives "The Naked Truth"

to Important Gathering at Biltmore

The A. M. P. A. outdid itself last night at the Biltmore with an important function at its office.
The first formal dinner of this organization was attended by many notables of the industry, and it was a huge success. It was copied after the internationally famous dinner of the Gridiron Club of Washington, and many of the ways in which the Biltmore has run off, the chances are that future affairs of this kind will be in the limelight of this industry.

While the guests, numbering about 200, entered the special ballroom of the Biltmore, reserved for the occasion, they were surprised and interested in many of the cards and genre which were scattered about,

and which referred to the Blue Law

publicity which has attracted so much attention in the industry.

When President Paul Lazarus announced that the dinner was ready, the first of the two courses of the evening arrived. The innumerable number of cards for each table, and each of these was taken in hand by the president and his brother guests about him a parade and, to the accompaniment of music the guests marched behind their valuable symbols to their place. This started the affair in the proper spirit.

Immediately after the guests had taken their places the stunts were started, and it is impossible, at this time, to record the various events, except in passing, to say that were planned for the purpose of matching the fun of the place.

One of the features of the dinner was the special "Naked Truth" edition of WID'S DAILY, distributed to the diners.

Among those who were present, or expected were:

In the Courts

Augustus Thomas has filed suits in the Supreme Court against Artco for $1,000 and $2,000, respectively, for the loss of his suit. In the former, first action he alleges he made a contract with Harry Raver which was assumed by the defendant, by which he was to receive only $2,000, and that $3,500 additional is due as his share of the profits. In the second action he alleges that he was entitled to $20,000 from "The Capitol" and "The Volcano" under a similar contract.

The plaintiff asked for his $250 and $1,000 damages, and the defendant did not appear.

Judge Prattick in the Supreme Court has returned a verdict favoring Harry M. and Albert Warner, known as Warner Bros., against Patrick A. Powers. Theater Owners has forbidden its members to run pictures which have been shown in other places but picture theaters under penalty of a 5,000 crown fine.

This contract was to cover the period of one year, but at the same time Alliance was not bound to distribute exclusively through First National. In June, 1920, G. A. Rogers issued a statement which rather clearly indicated that Alliance was considering the establishment of its own exchanges in this country. Following that statement, no announcement was ever made. Neither have First National officials intimated in any way that the circuit has received any pictures from Alliance, although the first "Carnival" was recently traded shown in London.

In August there was a shake-up and Charles Frederick Higham, managing director, and Sidney Reynolds, production manager, were through. In September reports from London had it that a committee of stockholders had demanded an accounting of the firm's accounts. As a result, Lord Hare, vice-president of the company, arrived from London and denied that the company was in difficulties.

The matter rested there until November when English trade papers began to comment editorially on the silence of the company. The Film Renter of London devoted its leading article in one issue, asking the directors a number of specific questions as to the "modus operandi" of the organization.

A few days ago this publication received the trade showing London's proofs of the first picture, "Carnival," which Harley Knoles produced.

Spence May Join Walsh

It is understood that a deal is under way between Ralph Spence and R. A. Walsh whereby Spence will act as assistant to the director of the company. Length of Production........ 6,734 feet

Paramount has decided that Augustus Thomas' stage play was worthy of a second production and have left it to William D. Taylor to do the job. The play was produced in 1916, by the Frohman Amusement Corp., with C. Aubrey Smith, the noted English actor. George Irving, directed and Anthony Kelly did the scenario for the Frohman production which was very well received at that time.

The present production is an intelligent and well developed version which should also meet with satisfaction and it would seem that at this time particularly, it should be widely booked because of the current discussions of the question of the psychic powers. It's what is commonly termed "deep stuff," but there's a good many who find entertainment in just this sort of thing. For them especially "The Witching Hour" should be a winner.

Director Taylor has laid the most stress on the mental telepathy idea in his production, although he seems to make a hypnotic influence of it when Elliott Dexter looks his would-be murderer in the eye and the latter drops his weapon. The development is quite logical and the incidents well woven together. The picture is a bit too long but can be remedied by cutting some irrelevant bits, for instance, the darky cakewalk sequence which isn't necessary.

Viola, the niece of Jack Brookfield, a professional gambler, is engaged to Clay Whipple, the son of a widow whom Jack has always loved. Frank Hardmuth, assistant district attorney, is also a suitor for Viola but disapproved of by her guardian. Clay has inherited a fear which borders on insanity, whenever he sees a cat's-eye jewel. When Tom Denning, drunk at the moment, taunts Clay with the jewel, the latter strikes Denning and kills him.

Hardmuth is in a position to force the prosecution. Clay is found guilty and sentenced. In the meantime the boy's mother recalls that Judge Prentice, a member of the Supreme Court, is an old sweetheart of her dead mother's. She appeals to him and he recalls an incident of a cat's-eye jewel which had caused him to fight a 'duel for Mrs. Whipple's mother, who also had an aversion to the jewel. The Judge agrees to secure another trial for Clay, at which he testifies as to the inherited aversion in Clay's family. In the meantime, Hardmuth is planning to run for Governor. As a last resort Brookfield exposes Hardmuth's past in which he was the cause of the murder of a Governor-elect. Clay is acquitted and later Brookfield allows Hardmuth to escape, explaining that he had thought of just such a murder as Hardmuth had executed and was guilty in thought so wanted Hardmuth to go free.

A Topic Under Immediate Discussion That Should Interest Them

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You can satisfy them with "The Witching Hour" generally, but even more so if you can interest them in the idea presented in the picture. You have a good title to work with and with explanatory lines relative to the story you should be able to get them in easily. Perhaps if they saw the Frohman production they will be interested in comparing the two.

Elliott Dexter, the featured player, is well enough known to warrant using his name and you can announce it as one of William D. Taylor's productions for Paramount. Mention his "The Furnace" and "The Soul of Youth," if you played them. Secure a Paramount press sheet and use the suggestions contained in it.

CHARACTER OF STORY ...... General mixup result-

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ........ 4,200 feet

Eileen Percy, whose pulchritude has won her many admirers in the past, continues just as attractive and charming through five reels of terrible complications in "The Blushing Bride," as she ever has before. The star’s appearance and personal charm will be pretty sure to please almost anyone, although she hasn’t been called upon for much display of ability. The whole thing as an entertainment will be apt to fall short of satisfying a majority of audiences. It is farce, and farce, more than any other form of drama, must be mightily carefully handled to put it over right.
In this one, both the director and the performers have been to anxious to make it funny, with the result that their efforts are apparent, and a goodly number of the situations are overdone, some approaching burlesque.

Some again are very funny, and they might balance each other if it were not for several confusing sequences in the middle of the picture, where every member of the cast is chasing each other, with the audience never certain who is chasing whom. They started off with a good clear farcical situation. The girl pretends to be the niece of a Marquis, and in that guise marries the son of a snobbish aristocrat. Then she finds the butler in their home is her real uncle.
The Marquis comes to the house, married to the butlver’s ex-wife, and the situation gives evidence of funny development.

Right here comes too much action for the spectator to keep track of, and the introduction of a good bit of slapstick detracts from the fun that is expected, and substitutes considerable hokum. The sub-titles too fall short of their humorous purpose, although they may register with those who demand only the simplest kind of humor. Their attitude of kidding the story and the action rather lessens the effect of some of the situations.

There is a scene in a swimming pool that is very funny, and in spite of the fact that it does nothing to advance the action of the story, some length is given to it, and it will probably provide more laughs than any other portion of the picture.

This One Might Do On Double Feature Day

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

It is a question whether this feature is strong enough to carry over a regular program well. With less critcical audiences it may furnish an acceptable amount of entertainment, but in most houses it will need something else to help it along. For that reason, the best way to use the picture will be on a double feature day, or with shorter reels of importance. You can make use of the star’s name to advantage, and say that she is as attractive in this piece as ever before.

Talk about the situation that started all the trouble,
as the beginning is a good one, and will create interest.
You’d best not go strong on promises about the up-orroarinosness of the farce, however, unless you know that your audiences are not discriminating. If you want a catch lines use this: “See what happened when Beth’s Duke-uncle turned out to be her husband’s butler, in ‘The Blushing Bride.’”

INTERIORS. . . . . Some quite elaborate ones

DETAIL ......................... Often too much

CHARACTER OF STORY. . . Spendthrift wife eventually realizes the folly of her extravagance

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ........ 5,833 feet

As it stands, there are several features that detract from the entertainment value of the latest vehicle provided for May Allison. One of these could be corrected by editing, for the picture would have a much better chance of getting over if cut down to five reels, and the punch of the story could be put over in less footage than that. The lack of incident has compelled the makers to lengthen sequences of minor importance and to pad the last half with lots of dialogue, told in swifit, flashing sub-titles. The picture, adapted from Ben Ames Williams' "More Stately Mansions," tells the story of a young wife's reckless squandering of her husband's money, and while she continues her wastefulness all through the theme, nothing comes of her extravagance until the very end of the picture.

The idea of her wastefulness is enforced by example after example of her careless throwing away of cash, and the various scenes in which she cajoles money from her worried husband make up nearly the entire picture.

These examples, which are all very much the same procedure, become monotonous, and as each one develops without any attendant action, there is a gradual let down in the interest, until toward the fifth reel most audiences will abandon hope of anything happening. It makes for some suspense for a time, to figure how the husband will surmount his troubles, but this suspense doesn't hold through so much slow action. There is a good strong climax, eventually, when the young husband, driven to desperation by his wife's demands for money, forges his father's name to a check and at length awakens his wife to her folly.

The star is fine in these last scenes, and for that matter all the way through she is most pleasing to watch. She plays the part of the thoughtless wife in exactly the right way, and by her performance tides over some of the slowest parts of the action. No one in the cast has a part that requires a great deal, but the principal roles are all ably taken care of.

In keeping with the society atmosphere of the story, there are several quite extravagant sets.

Use Star's Name, But You Better Look It Over First

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

At its present length you will find it hard to keep your audiences interested all the way through "Extravagance." "More Stately Mansions," from which it is taken, appeared in Good Housekeeping, a magazine with large circulation, and you can therefore interest a good many by making known this fact. This, together with use of the star's name, if she is popular with your clientele, will undoubtedly be sufficient to get the crowds into your house, but it would be well to see the picture yourself first and decide what you want to make in the way of promises. You will be safe in promising a thoroughly pleasing performance by the star, and you can make talking points of the staging of several of the scenes. The title and theme, however, suggest more action than is really to be found, so it will be well to consider this before enlarging too much on either.

CHARACTER OF STORY......Swedish sailor who saves his money only to have a woman take it from him, finally marries his first sweetheart

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .......... 4,496 feet

Will Rogers takes quite a jump in "Guile of Women," and from the lariat throwing cowboy, he comes forth as a simple souléd Swedish sailor and is a thoroughly convincing Yal. The story isn't an unusually strong one but it has an individuality at that and provides the star with a role which gives him a chance to do something different and as Yal, the sailor, he retains his own mannerisms with a little Swedish added here and there. Then too, the titles help the realism along by being written in English, as the Swede would talk it.

There are many good comedy bits and a touch of pathos here and there though it is soon followed by more comedy. A fair amount of amusement is obtained from the sequence dealing with Yal's venture into the delicatessen business into which he puts $3,000, only to find that Annie, his partner, refuses to admit that fact when Yal decides to sell the store and buy a share in a ship. Yal has no receipts to show and so he loses all. "Delicatessen" is the pass word thereafter whenever he encounters a woman.

There is a bit of suspense too, in the fact that Yal's old sweetheart comes to this country and is living in the home of the steamship line's owner. It isn't until the end that you learn she cared for the man's wife who died on the ship coming over, and was then adopted as his daughter. Rogers is just as pleasing as the Swede sailor as he has been in previous pictures and he always registers real comedy. He wears some trick hats that enhance his attractive homeliness.

Yal had sent $1,000 to his sweetheart Hulda, but five years have passed and she has not arrived to be his bride. In the meantime, Yal has lost $3,000 in a delicatessen store adventure with Annie. Yal decides his Waterloo is women and intends to keep his money to himself in the future. Following his most recent loss, Hulda appears on the scene but Yal isn't in a mood to make a fuss over her. She explains that she never received the money but saved her own to come to him. Hulda soon has Yal giving her his money to save much to the disgust of Yal's friend, Skole, who continually warns him of the last venture.

Eventually Yal and Hulda plan to be married but at the appointed hour Yal fails to appear. Yal had been shanghaid by another of Hulda's admirers but he escapes and arrives, minus shoes and socks, for his wedding. Yal is shocked to learn that Hulda is the owner of the steamship line which he inherited upon the death of Captain Larssen, who had adopted her as his daughter.

Play Up The Star And You Can Promise Them A Good Picture

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You can be sure of pleasing them with Will Rogers' latest, a story of a Swede sailor who saved his money while women spent it. This is different from anything he has done for the screen as yet and you can make promises along this line. You can assure them of a good, clean comedy offering that will be sure to entertain them and say that the star is just as pleasing in his new role as he has been in previous pictures.

There are some good shots of San Francisco, some taken on Telegraph hill, overlooking the city, which will interest those who know the city. Stills in your lobby and catchlines will get them in. Recall some of Rogers' recent productions and regarding this say:
"Do you trust your girl with your savings? Yal did but see what happened to him. He was 'The Guile of Women.'"

This Cost Sheet, and the comparative report sheet found on the opposite page, were prepared especially for the Crandall Theaters of Washington, of which Harry Crandall is president, by Fritz Hoffmann, who for many years has been auditor of the Crandall houses.

Mr. Crandall believes this is the most complete cost sheet plan ever prepared, and through WID'S DAILY, cheerfully offers the idea for any exhibitor to adopt for his house.

In connection with the schedule found above Mr. Hoffmann says:

"The most essential part of a business today is to be able to show the management of same the cost of production. The attached sample as given shows the results obtained by having a cost system in your business, as the majority of business concerns overlook the fact of their fixed charges items, as follows:

Depreciation, Heat, Insurance, Interest, Rent and Taxes.

You will note the cost sheet gives the items of various operating expense as listed which are placed in the respective days, and at the end of week, same are footed, in the following, under heading of Fixed Charges, the com total making the cost per day of operating same.

The statement also shows expenses, listed, and received daily, tax being kept separately, and difference either loss or profit, as same may show. You can by looking at this report see readily on what day you showed to a loss first finding your total cost of any day, then your receipt same said day, thus showing you immediately if you lost.

The recapitulation of bank statement and profit and account serve to keep you posted as to condition as shown thereby up to the present report."
In explaining the report captioned "Current Week Ending" Hoffmann says:

"Current Week Ending is for a week of this year against the corresponding week of last year, showing increase or decrease on the week as the case may be; also showing by percentage the cost of the individual expense item and showing the percentage opposite profit or loss. Same applies to the admission, admission revenue, and admission cost per head.

Regarding "Total to Date" Hoffmann says: "Total to Date is the total for as many weeks as your report shows for the current week ending and the same results are obtained by percentage, as are in the weekly comparison, giving you immediately the information as to business conditions up to date."

Another Satisfactory Offering For The State Rights Market

"THE SUPREME PASSION"
Film Market, Inc.—State Rights
DIRECTOR ....................... Samuel Bradley
AUTHOR ............. Robert McLaughlin and Charles T. Dazey
SCENARIO BY ............... Not credited
CAMERAMAN .................. E. M. Reynolds
AS A WHOLE...... Story is easy to follow and production is adequate; is a trifle too long drawn out STORY...... Rather attractive theme, not strikingly original but has good surprise finish DIRECTION...... A fault of the picture; it is noticeably poor
PHOTOGRAPHY .............. Satisfactory
LIGHTINGS............. Fair; often too bright on faces CAMERA WORK ............. Up to standard
PLAYERS...... Florence Dixon pleasing heroine;
Dan Kelly very natural as her father; others well suited with exception of Cecil Owen, a sort of villain
EXTERIORS ........................ All right
INTERIORS .............. Some too "stagey" looking DETAIL .......................... Fair
CHARACTER OF STORY...... Irish girl almost marries man she doesn't love to save parents but finds a way out
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... About 6,000 feet

An introductory title informs the spectator that "The Supreme Passion" was inspired by Thomas Moore's poem, "Believe Me If All Those Endearing Young Charms," and that Robert McLaughlin and Charles T. Dazey are the inspired parties. Truthfully they have conceived a rather attractive story based on the question of whether a woman is loved for the beauty of body or of soul.

The story has been given an adequate production but those in charge of the making of the picture might have done much better things with it. The main fault with it is the direction, or rather the lack of it. In the first place he takes too much time in reaching the main point of the various situations so that the interest often drags. He is to be credited, however, with handling the climax very well and the surprise at the end is never expected and makes a very fitting conclusion. There are errors in detail which could have been avoided, some of which even casual observers will detect. Some unnecessary titles of conversation can also be eliminated to the betterment of the film.

Florence Dixon is quite pleasing as the Irish heroine, who isn't really a true Irish type; the best acting is done by Daniel Kelly, the father. Others in the cast are William Mortimer, Robert Adams, Mrs. Charles Willard, Madelyn Clare and Selmar Jackson who makes the most of the hero.

James Lacey decides that he wants to marry the pretty daughter of Jerry Burke who lives in Ireland with his wife and daughter Mary. Lacey persuades Mrs. Burke to get her husband to move to America where Mr. Burke will become rich and she will have social prestige. Mary bids good-bye to her sweet-heart Charlie. Later he follows her to America, but is heartbroken when he finds she is being forced to marry Lacey. It is the wish of Mrs. Burke but the father wants Mary to decide for herself.

Mary refuses Lacey but he is one to get what he wants and strikes for it by threatening ruin to Mary's father. Rather than allow it Mary agrees to marry him, but shortly before the ceremony Mary meets with an accident which scars her face. Lacey refuses to go through the ceremony because he wants a beautiful wife. Later Mary and her Mother go back to Ireland, again followed by Charlie, who wants Mary regardless of beauty. Then he learns that it was all a ruse to get rid of Lacey and that there isn't any scar at all.

Use Your Own Judgment With Regard To The Title
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This should go well on the state rights market and with a few eliminations and corrections can be made an even more attractive offering. The picture has already had a rather extensive advertising campaign and has secured a foundation for you to work on. The title is misleading since it hints at a "sexy" theme but it is quite to the contrary. If you think it better to clear yourself on this point, especially if you cater to a neighborhood clientele, catchlines will set them straight.

Or if you think the title will have a drawing power in your community, stick to it and use it in connection with teaser lines such as, "What is The Supreme Passion? You will find the answer at the blank theater." You haven't much in the way of names to work with, so you will have to depend upon the title and catchlines which can be worked to good advantage.
Powerful Drama, Exceptional Acting And Beautifully Artistic

"YOU AND I"

Swedish Biograph Co.—Radisoul—State Rights

D. RECTOR ....................... Victor Seastrom
AUTHOR ...................... John Sigur Johnson
SCENARIO BY ................. Not credited
CAMERAMAN .................. J. Julius

AS A WHOLE.....An excellent picture; artistic production, fine acting and beautiful settings STORY......Exceptional handling of eternal triangle theme makes it distinctive DIRECTION......Very good; story smoothly told and fine artistic effort
PHOTOGRAPHY ............... Excellent
LIGHTINGS......Very fine, especially because it is mostly natural
CAMERA WORK ............. First rate
PLAYERS.....Victor Seastrom gives admirable performance as does Edith Erastow; all splendid types EXTERIORS .......... A scenic in themselves
INTERIORS ................. Good
DETAIL .................. Adequate
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Woman becomes outcast to marry outlaw whom she loves and remains with him until they meet death in the snow

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 6,000 feet

The Swedish Biograph Co. has made a real picture from John Sigur Johnson's story, "Eyvind of the Hills," with Victor Seastrom. There is one change, or rather elimination, which should be made immediately and that is to do away with the prologue and epilogue of American manufacture which has been added to the original picture as made in Iceland. This isn't at all necessary and detracts from the force of the main story which in itself is forceful; and merely the fact that it has an unhappy ending isn't excuse enough for having the epilogue. Even though the consensus of opinion is that audiences want happy endings, there is so much realism, artistic effort and splendid acting in, "You and I," that the ending as it is, will satisfy anyone.

In theme it doesn't differ greatly from a hundred and one eternal triangle stories which have been done time and again in this country, but regardless of this, "You and I" is different. In the first place it takes place in Iceland, where the actual scenes have been shot, and it is so different in atmosphere and so well handled that you cannot help but appreciate it. The direction is very good, the story smoothly told and there is a good continuity, a feature which is not always apparent in foreign made productions.

The dramatic moments are powerful and there's one real "punch" that grips, where the husband falls from the cliff and is at the mercy of a man in love with his wife. Seastrom's performance is exceptional and he is capably supported by Edith Erastow and others. The settings would make a scenic reel by themselves, so beautiful are they. Detail is also good.

Kari, a wanderer, comes into the household of Halla, who is sought by her brother-in-law, the Constable. But Halla loathes the man who is made jealous by her kindness to Kari. Later the Constable learns Kari is hiding from the law, and tells Halla, who refuses to believe it until Kari admits its truth, but it was a small crime—the stealing of a sheep for his starving family. Henceforth became "Eyvind of the Hills." But Halla loves Kari, marries him and they go forth, outcasts together. They hide away among the hills and are happy with their little child until the Constable hears of their hiding place. Tom, an old friend of Kari's who had been living with them, is about to depart because he is ashamed of himself for telling Kari's wife of his love for her. Tom sees the Constable coming and warns Kari. But is too late to escape. While Kari battles with the men, the Constable attacks Halla and throws her child from the cliff. Halla and Kari, sometime later, still in hiding, die together in a snow drift.

Promise Them A Treat In Another Swedish Biograph Picture

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Exery exhibitor who seeks pictures that are "different," will certainly want to book "You and I," adapted from "Eyvind of the Hills," in which Margaret Wicherly is now playing the leading role in the stage version at the Greenwich Village Theater, New York. Victor Seastrom is the featured player of the screen production and you need not be afraid to make promises in connection with his performance. It is splendid.

Be sure to tell them of the genuine Iceland locale and secure stills of the scenes containing some of these beautiful backgrounds. You can tell them that this is even better than "A Man There Was," if you played it. Catchlines telling the story can't do it justice, so confine your announcements to promises regarding its artistic production, splendid acting and unusual handling of an ordinary theme.
Thoroughly Appropriate Production But Barrie Humor Is Lacking

William De Mille’s production
“WHAT EVERY WOMAN KNOWS” with Conrad Nagel and Lois Wilson
Paramount

DIRECTOR ..................... William De Mille
AUTHOR ....................... Sir James M. Barrie
SCENARIO BY ................ Olga Printzlauf
CAMERAMAN ................... Guy Wilky

AS A WHOLE.......Good production given to Barrie play, but it doesn’t register entertainment in screen form

STORY............Often dull without original dialogue even though the author is quoted in sub-titles

DIRECTION........Depends too often on Barrie quotations for his humor; otherwise satisfactory

PHOTOGRAPHY ..................All right

LIGHTINGS.............Good; one very dark background

CAMERA WORK .................Good

PLAYERS.......Lois Wilson the better of the featured players; Conrad Nagel correctly impassive; others adequate

EXTERIORS .....................Hardly any

INTERIORS ...................Good

DETAIL .......................First rate

CHARACTER OF STORY.......Young politician gains fame through the speeches his wife writes for him and then falls in love with another

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ........6,675 feet

Those who admire the works of Sir James M. Barrie may be satisfied with “What Every Woman Knows” as a picture, but those who are not familiar with the quaint humor of the writer probably won’t be greatly impressed with his stage play which William De Mille has picturized in excellent fashion, giving it a production artistically and technically well done. But Barrie’s own peculiar vein of humor is missed in the picture version and can’t be duplicated by pantomine.

De Mille has, in his sub-titles, quoted the author directly quite often and usually the audience approved by their audible amusement but on the whole, the idea of the politician who became famous through the speeches his wife wrote for him, seemed to be too far fetched and there isn’t enough incident to hold the attention all the time. Lois Wilson interprets pleasingly the role of the wife whose patience is apt to try that of the audience. Conrad Nagle fulfills the part of the husband in a correctly impassive manner.

The direction is very good except that it would seem William De Mille might have gotten some humor through his players. He depends almost entirely on the sub-titles. And so it often happens that between captions, “What Every Woman Knows” becomes dull and uninteresting. The production itself is all that even Barrie could ask.

Maggie Wylie’s father agrees to give John Shand three hundred dollars to help him secure an education and further his political ambitions, on condition that Maggie have the option of marrying Shand within five years. By doing this old Wylie is giving the twenty-seven year old “miss” a chance for the romance she longs for and at the same time is helping an ambitious young man. Shand agrees and within the allotted time is elected to Parliament. Maggie realizes John doesn’t love her and is willing to relieve him of his contract, but he insists that “a bargain’s a bargain,” and so they are married.

Shand becomes very popular and is promised promotion through his excellent speeches, written mostly by Maggie, though Shand takes the credit. Eventually he falls in love with Lady Sybil and although heartbroken, Maggie diplomatically arranges to allow John and Sybil to be together. Somehow John’s next speech is a failure but Maggie arrives in time with a new one. Eventually Lady Sybil tells John he bores her and she leaves. Gradually John appreciates Maggie’s true worth and there is a reconciliation.

Plenty Of Names To Attract Them

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

“What Every Woman Knows” isn’t an unusual picture generally speaking, but it has bits that can be made good talking points in interesting your patrons. You have the name of the author and his name will be sure to attract those who admire his writing. You have the name of William DeMille, and if you have shown his most recent productions with success you can recall “The Prince Chap,” “Civilian Clothes,” “Mid-summer Madness” and “Conrad in Quest of his Youth.”

Those who recall Lois Wilson and Conrad Nagel in “Midsummer Madness,” may want to see them again so you can use their names. Also mention the fact that Mande Adams played the leading role in the stage play. Catchlines built around Barrie’s quaint story can be used. The Paramount press sheet contains further suggestion for exploitation.
Russell Puts Plenty Of Action Into This

William Russell in "BARE KNUCKLES"
Fox

DIRECTOR ................. James Patrick Hogan
AUTHOR .................. A. Channing Edington
SCENARIO BY ............. James Patrick Hogan
CAMERAMAN ............... George Schneiderman

AS A WHOLE....... Just what the title implies; a story of fist fights that gives star plenty of such opportunities

STORY.......Given a good production, especially latter reels are very good

DIRECTION.......Gets good punch out of last two reels; good Northern atmosphere

PHOTOGRAPHY ............... Good
LIGHTINGS .................. All right CAMERA WORK ............. Snow storm stuff good STAR.......Lots of chances to show how he can fight

in this

SUPPORT ..................... Satisfactory
EXTERIORS .................. Pretty snow scenes
INTERIORS ................. Adequate
DETAIL ...................... Sufficient

CHARACTER OF STORY....... Construction builder employs man known as "The Brute," to force job to finish at appointed time

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ........ 3,861 feet

If you're looking for a good "scrappy" picture, you can be sure you're getting one if you book "Bare Knuckles," William Russell's latest Fox picture. It's full of regular "knock 'em dead" fist fights with the star doing to knocking. Russell has all the chance in the world in this one to show how he can fight and he makes good use of every opportunity. The first reel or so is a trifle slow but once they get into the story and have the characters planted, it doesn't take long to get it going. The best half of the picture is the last half. The atmosphere is Northern and there are many fine snow scenes with much of the action taking place in the snow. There's one very fine fight scene taking place on the roof of a small shack with the star and his antagonist jumping off the building to finish their fight.

There's a man named Benham, who is trying to tie up the work on a dam, the construction of which is to be completed at a certain time. Somehow or other they don't make his purpose very clear, but it suffices that he's the cause of all the fight in the picture, and so he's a necessary character. There ought to be at least one shot of the dam prior to the closing scene, since it is the cause of all the controversy. They refer to it so frequently in the titles that it would be well to show one view of it. A good feature of the picture is that the director hasn't wasted any time with unnecessary close-ups.

Tim McGuire, noted for the force of his fist, is secured by Metcalfe to rush a construction job on a dam, to completion at a certain time. Benham and his partner, Haines, try in every way to block Tim in his efforts. But Tim's fists keep things going until finally Benham and Haines hit upon a final desperate idea which they carry out, almost successfully. They attack Tim, bind and gag him, and leave him near the store-house in which they place a fuse.

Fern, a sort of adopted sister of Tim's, arrives in time to save him, just as the building blows up. In the meantime Haines has taken Metcalfe's daughter Lorraine, to a deserted shack. Tim follows Haines and finds him attacking Lorraine. Haines shoots Tim in the arm but with the other good arm, Tim fights Haines and finally drives him out of the cabin. The dam is completed on time and Tim wins Lorraine.

Will Be Sure To Satisfy Those Who Like The Star

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This is a good lively story and if your folks like William Russell they'll surely like his latest, "Bare Knuckles." You can talk about the snow scenes and the action taking place in the North. Promise them enough good fights to satisfy. They'll probably like the romance running through it, although it isn't given so much prominence. It's more of a man's picture so appeal to the male element of your patrons, especially.

Mary Thurman plays the heroine. If your folks know her you might mention her name. Make the most noise about the fights in the picture and use lines such as: "He was called 'The Brute,' but he had brutes to deal with. But see how he won his way into the heart of the woman he loved in 'Bare Knuckles,' William Russell's latest Fox picture playing at the blank theater."
Direction And Poor Acting Handicap Rather Good Story Material

“BARS OF IRON”
Stoll Film—Pathe
DICTOR .................. F. Martin Thornton
AUTHOR .................. Ethel M. Dell
SCENARIO BY ................. F. Martin Thornton
CAMERAMAN ................ Not credited
AS A WHOLE............ Rather good story material handicapped by direction and poor acting STORY.............. Hasn't been made the most of; continuity isn't good and too much has been made of minor details DIRECTION........... Could be much better; has secured good locations, the picture's best feature
PHOTOGRAPHY ................. All right
LIGHTINGS............. Fair; sometimes glaring on players' face CAMERA WORK .................. Good
PLAYERS.......... Madge White does the best work;
Roland Myles, hero, overacts most of the time
EXTERIORS .......... Many very pretty shots
INTERIORS ................. Adequate
DETAIL ......................... Fair
CHARACTER OF STORY..... Son of English aristocrat fights to marry governess and then learns it was her husband he had killed sometime before.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ........ 5,100 feet

There's a pretty good story for the screen in Ethel M. Dell's "Bars of Iron" which, although it isn't startlingly original, contains the sort of material that can be developed into a good picture. Stoll's production of it will probably get by for it manages to hold the attention all the way, but it might have been a much better picture than it is.

The locations secured are a feature of the picture and consist of many pretty shots of English country estates, the hunt, and other good exteriors. They have been selected with evident care and form a background always pleasing to look at. Madge White, the heroine of the story, has a pleasing personality and her performance dominates the production. Roland Myes, hero, is guilty of overacting most of the time. When he is in repose he is rather pleasing, but in emotional sequences, he is unconvincing and relies too much on physical action to register various emotions. Close-ups of him "acting" can be eliminated, or at least the majority of them. This would help.

The director has given too much attention to minor details, such as the hero's devotion to a little girl who breaks her leg. One expects this to have something to do with the actual plot, but it doesn't and only causes the action to drag.

Piers Eversham, heir to the estate and title, falls in love with Alice Denys, a governess. Col. Eversham refuses to give his consent to a marriage. Alice refuses to marry Piers because of his father's objection, but relents when the dying father makes her promise she will marry his son.

Sometime before his marriage Piers had been forced into a fight with a sheep-ranger in Australia and had killed him. It is shortly after his marriage that he discovers a picture of his victim in Alice's picture album. He learns that the man was Alice's husband who "was a drunkard, but otherwise treated her all right." Dixon, a fellow who had seen the brawl in which Piers killed the man, appears and Alice overhears the story of how Piers killed her husband. She refuses to forgive him and he prepares to go away. Later Dixon explains how he had a grievance against Alice's husband and had poured poison in his drink and it was the poison that killed him, not Piers' blow. Follows the reconciliation.

Use Catchlines. Don't Make Promises

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

American audiences are probably finding a pleasing variety in the locations found in the Stoll pictures. They are usually very picturesque and more than often are no small feature of the picture. If you have been playing their product so far and been giving satisfaction, you can book "Bars of Iron" and most likely satisfy them. It's of the average program calibre and you can announce the title and play it up with catchlines. It isn't particularly applicable, but can be worked with lines such as "When he had finally won the girl and could marry her he was confronted with 'Bars of Iron.' How did he escape them?"

There are no players names to work with so confine your announcement to the story. If the author is known you might use her name. Another line which could be used is: "Suppose you were married to a woman whose husband you had killed. Would you expect her to forgive you when she learned the truth? See 'Bars of Iron' for the answer. It's Stoll's latest picture.
Considerable Action And Suitable Story For Star

Gladys Walton in
"ALL DOLLED UP"
Universal

DIRECTOR .................. Rollin Sturges
AUTHOR ........................ John Colton
SCENARIO BY ................ A. P. Younger
CAMERAMAN ................... Alfred Gosden

AS A WHOLE...... Rather interesting story given some clever twists and is a good vehicle for star

STORY ...... Well developed and contains many surprises; will surely please those who like Miss Walton

DIRECTION ...... All right; works up to good climax but it’s a bit exaggerated

PHOTOGRAPHY ............... Satisfactory
LIGHTINGS .......................... Good
CAMERA WORK ................. Average

STAR ........... Seems to have enjoyed working in this

SUPPORT ......... Quite suitable EXTERIORS ....................... Adequate
INTERIORS ......................... Good

DETAIL ......... Good
CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Shop girl save rich woman’s necklace from thief, thereby winning the romance she craves

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... 4,789 feet

Gladys Walton’s latest picture for Universal is an interesting bit of entertainment if you’re willing to overlook its implausibilities and most folks will, because it is well developed and proves a first rate vehicle for the star. Of course it’s not an unusual picture and didn’t cost a great many dollars to make, but it is a thoroughly good program offering that keeps moving to the end when the grand climax is reached. They exaggerate the latter to some extent but it doesn’t matter very much.

There are some clever twists to the story which make the romance end of it fairly original. It doesn’t matter very much that the ending is a bit obvious, since you’re left off the track several times before it turns out as you expected. Gladys Walton proves she can fight as well as “play” demure, and she is given two good opportunities to show what she can do. Her second chance is rather strenuous and some of the censors may object to its being carried so far.

Maggie Quick, is a cash girl in a department store, annoyed by the usual type of floorwalker whom she “beats up,” when he visits her boarding house uninvited. One day Maggie saves the pearls of a wealthy Miss Bundy from a thief, for which she is rewarded by a check for $100 from the firm. Maggie gets “All Dressed Up,” and when the floorwalker follows her, Jim Johnson asks her into his automobile to escape her admirer. Jim is Maggie’s idea of a sweet-heart, and so she agrees to meet him later. Jim later confesses that he is only a chauffeur.

It happens that Jim is chauffeur for Miss Bundy who is engaged to marry an opera singer. The editor of “Tales of the Town” learns that the singer is merely marrying Miss Bundy for her money and realizing that the singer has a family, he suggests an easier way than bigamy, and so they plan to place Miss Bundy in a compromising position by inviting her to a notorious place and blackmailing her to keep it out of the papers. But Miss Bundy is informed of the singer’s latest plan by a jealous admirer so she sends her hope chest full of clothes to Maggie. In the pocket of a coat given to Maggie, is the name of the place to which Miss Bundy was to have gone. Jim does not know Maggie’s name or address and when she faints he takes her to the notorious place where she has to fight for her life. Later Miss Bundy adopts Maggie and Jim.
Should Satisfy For It's A First Rate Program Picture
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Gladys Walton in
"ALL DOLLED UP"
Universal

This young Universal star has been turning out uniformly good program pictures and "All Dolled Up," is another of her recent releases which should give satisfaction. Miss Walton is quite pleasing as the department store ship girl who accidently stumbles upon the romance which she has always longed for. The title doesn't give much of any idea of what to expect, but it probably has a drawing power which can be made stronger by linking it up with lines such as: "What is the first thing any girl would do if she suddenly received $100? She'd get 'All Dolled Up,' just as Gladys Walton does in her latest Universal release."

Use the star's name also and mention some of her recent pictures such as, "Risky Business" and "Rich Girl, Poor Girl." Play up the idea of the shop girl's longing for a romance and how she found one.

"IT'S ALL WRONG" SAYS HODKINSON

Probably few addresses of greater importance to the industry as a whole have been delivered of late than that of W. W. Hodkinson, before the M. P. D. A., at Hollywood, recently.

The Hodkinson address was of extreme length, but because of its importance, the greater portion is presented below.

In part Mr. Hodkinson said:

"We must either go along with the progress of the business or we must get out of the way of the brains who will come in and go along with the progress of the business, which will help its progress. I believe that the industry is at this minute facing two conditions which will make it necessary for us who wish to progress to take stock. I think that the business needs co-ordination. If it is better co-ordinated most of the problems that confront it can be handled. * * *

OPPOSED TO PRODUCERS CONTROL

"As some of you may know, I am frequently on record as opposed to producers' control of this industry. I don't know whether you know that I am on record to that effect. I don't know whether you know what I mean by that. I don't know whether you think that I mean anything by it, but I assure you that I do. I will endeavor to make clear just what I do mean by it and just what the great fundamental fault in this business is, and unless it is cured it will make you and me and every individual in this industry who wants to go along on the basis of individual merit incapable of utilizing our strength to get out of a situation which, unchecked, may some day destroy us.

"I believe the theory of the producer of a motion picture having the power to control the marketing of that picture is wrong. I do not say this because I want to be a middle man who gets in between a producer of a picture and gets a commission or a percentage that belongs to the producer, because I helped pass his pictures to the exhibitor. That isn't primarily the thing I am after. It is necessary to do that to get money to support the organization machinery necessary to properly co-ordinate these two functions of production and exhibition; and if you put this distribution channel into the hands of either, you create, as far as I am able to see, an abnormal and impossible condition.

"Now, let me illustrate more clearly just what I mean by that. You know we have today some fifteen national distributing organizations. Almost without exception, the distributing companies are adjuncts of producing companies.

"We hear about the great waste in the studios—and I presume there is great waste in the studios—but I want to tell you some waste that probably you do not know about.

ONLY TAKING HALF OF REVENUE FROM PUBLIC

"Through being improperly co-ordinated, this business is only taking one-half of the revenue from the public every year that it could take. Through being improperly co-ordinated the producers are producing twice as many pictures today as is necessary to fill all of the theaters in the United States.

"I can tell you how many millions are wasted there. Worse than that—or because of the first condition or a lack of patronage from the public—an excess of production of mediocre quality, inferior quality, are put out and only partially digested. And they are put out arbitrarily because they have to have a certain amount of product to run the machines of distribution which they happen to have.

"Half of the money being spent in the production of motion pictures today is wasted, because half of the number of pictures would get the same revenue from the public, and in a reasonable time double that revenue. * * *

"Did you ever stop to think what it means to have fifteen organizations of salesmen running around the country each trying to undo the work of the other fourteen all of the time? That is what is happening in this business.

"Did you ever stop to think how far this business can progress when we have to create tremendous machines with all of the politics that goes with them because we have to meet release date, and it takes a certain number of pictures to keep one of these machines going? That is, it takes a certain amount of product out of a production machine to keep a distributing machine going. There is room for lots of thought on this matter. I have given it a great deal of thought.

"If what I say is true, then we are beating ourselves out of half of the revenue that this business might have from the public if we knew what we were doing and if that is true it is quite a startling fact. If it is true that the industry has been producing twice as many pictures as it needs to get the present revenue to support the theaters, on the present basis of revenue, and to keep the same revenue at least immediately coming from the exhibitor and from the public, is a startling fact.

STARTLING IF TRUE

"If we are spending twenty million dollars a year to support these distributing machines when you could do the job much better with ten or less—that is startling if it is true.

"If the total sum spent in production and running these machines is greater than is taken out of the exhibitor—that is another thing that is startling if it is true; and I believe it is true.

"If these uneconomic conditions exist, they exist for one reason: the desire of each person in the business to play his own game, regardless of what happens to the business as a whole. This is a business, gentlemen, where people have been taking out, taking out, and nobody has been putting in; and we have got to the same stage we would get to if we did the same thing with grain. When we exhaust it we have to plant before we get another crop.

"I believe we are at the stage where we have to do some planting—more intelligent planting.
"You can't think of all of these things gentlemen, while you are busy producing the picture. It has got to begin at the top, and there must be some architects and planners who will formulate some plan for curing these conditions—and then cure them.

"Producer-control, I think, is a vicious thing. It puts the producer in an impossible position. If I thought it could be done, I would be a producer with a production organization and a distributing organization as well. I don't think it can be done. I don't think I can do it. I knew all these other executives that are trying to do it; I know them quite well. I don't see any of them that I think can do it. For the simple reason that when we get the balance of power by which we can force a thing which we happen to make into a market, whether it is fit or not, how are we going to be guided as to whether we are progressing or whether we are slipping.

DISTRIBUTORS WON'T CO-OPERATE

"Why do not these producers who are requested to put out so many pictures that they have to make them poorly in many instances to meet release dates, and who have to have their men travelling on the same train with some other men to sell products, or going into unsell the product the other fellow has sold,—why don't they cut down their product and why don't they consolidate their distribution? It is because they don't trust the others. It is because no producer would want to put his product through another producer's machine. He would rather carry along some organizations which he calls assets when they are liabilities; and the longer he carries them, and the greater liabilities they are, the less anxious he is to go to the banker and tell him that is the condition.

"So much for the production part of it with the producer-control.

"We have the exhibitor on the other side who feels that under this producer-control, he is charged all the producer can get out of him regardless of whether it is right or not. Without saying whether the exhibitor pays too much or too little, the undignified conditions gentlemen, on which motion pictures are sold is a disgrace to this business. The way they start out and ask $5,000 and take $250—it doesn't build any confidence; it doesn't injure any respect in the mind of the exhibitor or the men who work selling the pictures.

"We have got to have more scientific and better ways of determining values. It is possible to determine the value of pictures. Some years ago all pictures were ten cents a foot, and I went into New York and submitted a proposition to change them. I knew when I was trying to buy a producer's picture as cheaply as I could, that when he sold them to me he was trying to make them as cheaply as he could to get the margin of profit out of them. But that was regarded as foolish then, as maybe it is foolish today. When I say we should get some better means of selling the pictures that exists at present.

"But when I devised a percentage system whereby a producer owned his own product and had a live interest in it, progress began from that time on because the producer had a stake, he had an incentive.

CIVIL WAR ON

"The exhibitor today has no confidence in the people who supply him with films. He organizes, buys all the theaters in the town and tells you what he will give you. It is civil war. It is, as I say now, a condition where Mr. Cohen is telling you that Mr. Brady, the Representative of the National Association, who, because he is a fine speech maker, is telling the exhibitors that things are alright.

"They are all right, I presume, as far as Mr. Brady knows. He is telling them they are all right and the exhibitors is retorting by saying: 'We dealt with your National Association and you went back on your agreement; you broke your promises.'

"Gentlemen, do you think that a great, big, dignified—what should be a dignified industry like this, which gives us such a field for talent and brains is going to go along standing all of this mistreatment? It is not.

"It is either going to cave in and close up or it is going to get some hands that will run it properly."

"I walked away from the biggest thing in this business and staked my personal fortune, every dollar of it, three years ago, that this condition would whip itself—and it is doing it very properly and very promptly at present.

"Here is my big job today: I am trying to help some worthy elements on either side of this proposition to co-ordinate and function, and if we can help the rest to see the same thing and guide them and shape them—fine!

NO PATENT ON ANYTHING

"There is no patent on anything that I think. I am telling you what I found in a book brought out in 1917 when I said: 'What shall we do with the motion picture industry?' and told of this civil war that is happening now between Mr. Brady and Mr. Cohen, I showed it must lead inevitably to that.

"It is very hard to want to do things for an industry, for a lot of people in that industry, and to be misunderstood. It you gentlemen here are producers I am not interested in getting in between you and your market after a commission. I am interested in getting you that hundred percent increase in revenue you are missing now, and getting mine out of that. I don't want any of your commissions.

"It is a fine theory that these things are all wrong, but what are you going to do to better them? I have a mechanism that can be used with the exhibitor on one hand—because I don't put myself in a relationship with a producer where I have to be dishonest with the exhibitor—and furthermore, I want to put myself in a relationship with the exhibitors where I can be honest and fair with the producer who deals with me.

"If that doesn't solve the thing as far as we are must come into the industry, then I will say that I have wasted thirteen years in which I have studied this thing as carefully as any student ever studied an engineering problem. I have wasted those years and will take off my coat and go to work for the fellow who has the plan that will straighten this thing out."
Some Short Reels

"Modern Aspects of Japan"—Burton Holmes-Paramount

Type of production........................................1 reel travelogue

This reel acquires most of its interest from the unexpected evidences that it brings out of accidental civilization in the far East. The first views are of the city of Yokahama, starting out with a shot of the harbor from the veranda of the large European hotel. Several shots of the hotel are enough to convince the spectator that it is as modern and luxurious as any in the western hemisphere. Steamer day at the piers is shown next, and then follow a number of views from the train en route to Tokyo. Arriving at that city, the spectator is shown another immense hotel, the famous Bridge of Japan, in the heart of the city, and a thoroughly western department store, with beautiful roof garden on its top. Various shots about the city, a seaside resort, and some particularly beautiful lakes in the vicinity of the town, complete the reel. It is fully up to the standard of this series.

Paramount Magazine—Famous Players

There are only two subjects in this issue, and neither one is of sufficient importance or interest to make the reel more than a very mediocre one. First come some views of a meeting of the Independent Artists' Association, showing them planning and executing the poster for their annual party. Several more or less prominent artists are introduced, and are shown drawing and sketching. Shots of some weird futuristic works of art are slightly amusing. The last half of the reel is an animated cartoon that isn't very funny, nor very well animated. It's very jerky and the idea lacks the humor of the usual subject of this kind.

"The Heart of Arizona"—Universal

Type of production........................................2 reel western

About the only thing worthy of note in this one is the star, Eileen Sedgwick. The story is a highly improbable version of a standard western theme, where the foreman of the girl's ranch is much too deep dyed a villain, and the hero makes much too opportune appearances. He is always on the spot where anything starts, and it will be hard to make even the greatest western fans swallow all of it. Miss Sedgwick is very attractive to look at and her vivaciousness and pleasing personality help it out a lot. There is some humor in the scenes where all the neighboring ranchers come courting the heroine, but the excitement is very mild and the action so stereotyped that the conclusion is evident in the first few feet. At best it is only a fair offering.

"The Brand of Hate"—Universal

Type of production............................................2 reel western

Jack Perrin is the star of this number. It is a very wild and woolly one, and should make good entertainment for ardent western fans, although the stuff may be considered too much hokum by those less strong for heavy shooting. Perrin does some furious raiding, puts up fast fist fights, and keeps the action on the high point. He'd register better in the cowboy part, however, if he'd allow himself to be a bit more civilized. The story of this one makes good western material. There is a gang of night riders who are terrorizing the neighborhood, burning and pillaging, in spite of all efforts of the old sheriff. The gang captures the sheriff's daughter and she is saved by the hero, after a desperate fight in a burning shack. There are several good thrills furnished by falls from horses, over cliffs, and the story is clearly and completely told.

"The Cactus Kid"—Universal

Type of production.............................................2 reel western

This one stars Ed (Hoot) Gibson, and if he is popular with your patrons they will surely like this. It is a good western, whether Hoot is a favorite or not. He has plenty of chance to ride, and scrap and smile, and does the same in the light western fans. Hoot rescues her in a thrilling fight on top of an oil derrick. It looks real and furnishes a lot of excitement. A very pretty girl plays opposite the star, and adds considerable to the entertainment. It runs off snappily, and you should have no trouble in pleasing them with it if they like westerns at all.

"South Sea Magic"—Educational

Type of production............................................1 reel travelogue

This is one of what is known as the "World Wandering Series," and this time the wandering is done on the island of Samoa. It is a mighty good travel reel, with scarcely any of the footage uninteresting. It starts off with some fine shots of a remarkable coast line, with the breakers running high, affording some unusual sea views. Then the natives are shown making canoes, racing in canoes and fishing for sharks. The last is a particularly interesting subject, the pictures being taken from the boat in which the natives catch the huge fish by lassoing them over the side. They bring the sharks ashore and then they are shown preparing the big feast, to which the whole tribe is invited, and assembled before the camera. The making of Popoi, the native doll, is shown in detail, and it is also an interesting bit. It would be hard to find a more satisfactory travel picture or one whose appeal is more certain.

"Hubby Behave"—Educational

Type of production............................................1 reel comedy

This is one of the Vanity brand comedies, with Irene Dalton and Earl Rodney as its featured performers. It has a jazzy sort of humor that will go well with those who don't demand much subtlety to make them laugh, but it's shy on genuine comedy. Rodney may be remembered from his past appearances in Christie comedies, and his work is just the same in this one. Irene Dalton is rather pretty and just about the average comedy leading lady. The story of this one isn't new. It's about a young husband and his efforts to get out at night with his boys. He finally gets out through a plot by his friends and then gets arrested and found out. There are two or three situations which will probably get laughs anywhere, but the most of it is ordinary hokum that has been over worked. The fact that it is short may make it acceptable on a strong program.

"Caught In The Rapids"—Pathe

Type of production............................................2 reel western

This is classified as a western because it is of that general type although the scene is actually laid in the Canadian for exter. It is an Edgar Jones production of a Holman Day story, with Jones playing the leading part. There isn't enough sustained action to make really good entertainment of the picture. The story is rather a dull one, with only two real high lights in it, the best of which is a thrill provided by the rescue of the heroine from the rapids. Edna May Sperl plays opposite Jones and neither one of them is above the average. The story is of a lumber jack whose love for a girl is apparently returned until she meets a young boy from the city with whom she falls really in love. After saving her life, the lumber jack generously gives her up to the boy. It can't prove better than a fair offering in any house.
Short Reels

"Paint And Powder"—Pathé

Type of production...............................................1 reel comedy

This is a Vanity fair number, featuring Eddie Boland and the Girls. It has a funny idea and there are more laughs in the business than have been found in most of the previous offerings of this series. The Girls have opportunities galore to display themselves, as the action is laid in a beauty parlor. Boland puts over his stuff pretty well, and there are some new gags which are good laugh getters. Boland suddenly finds himself the proprietor of a beauty parlor, and he loses no time in getting busy around the shop. Most of the comedy comes from the treatments given to various seekers after beauty. You should be able to satisfy almost any audience with this reel.

"The Tempest"—Pathé

Type of production...............................................2 reel melodrama

This short feature stars Tom Sanichi. There are several points which raise it above the average two reel picture, in spite of the identical settings. Their mode of living and habits of birds are not as familiar as those of dolphinfish, but there are some fine scenic effects. The remaining good point is the photography, which is generally fine. Altogether it should be a highly satisfactory offering for anyone is the real audience. Sanichi is a wandering seaman who is shanghaied by a villainous captain. He tries to protect a boy aboard ship who has also been shanghaied. Swept overboard in a storm, Sanichi is washed ashore at a lighthouse. Then there's a love story between him and the lighthouse keeper's daughter.

Pathé Review—No. 94

Type of production...............................................1 reel magazine

This issue starts off with some colored shots of a lot of different species of goldfish. The tinting is well done, but aside from that the subject is not particularly interesting. The next subject is titled "Fancy Mud." It shows the process by which the Japanese make the mud tiles for their roofs, from ordinary clay. It is the longest bit in the reel, and just fairly interesting. Next comes a slow motion bit, showing a flock of barynayid bowlus in locomotion before the camera. Rather amusing. The next part will give the housewives a lesson in pie baking, by Mrs. Mary A. Wilson, former chef to the Queen Victoria, makes and bakes the pie in full view, and also gives her recipe for its manufacture. The last subject is another colored bit, "The Valley of Memories," and is not only beautiful, but interesting, in that it shows the valley of the Meuse River in France, before the war. It's an average reel except for the last subject, which is very good.

"Bali, the Unknown" or the "Ape Man Island"—Prisma

Type of production...............................................4 reel colored scenic

These are said to be the first pictures taken on the Island of Bali, a small island in the South Seas, which the titles claim is practically unknown. At any rate its inhabitants are primitive rather than savage, and have reached a stage of civilization which would indicate that they must have had some communication with the civilized. The mode of living and habits of the race have been interestingly recorded by Harold H. Horton, traveler and explorer. He has secured four very pretty views, and the beauty of which have been enhanced by the Prisma color process. There isn't a sufficient reason for the subsidiary title inasmuch as there is no specializing in apes, and the only "Ape Man" shown is an old native hunter, but since given but one short space on the film. The picture is on the Capitol program this week and seemed to please the Sunday matinee audience especially well.

"The Kid's Pal"—Century—Universal

Type of production...............................................2 reel comedy

This comedy containing a lot of slapstick of regulation variety, and it is amusingly well managed, with no unnoticeable on account of the work of a remarkably trained dog, who is the real featured performer. The dog is probably the best performing animal that has ever been seen in pictures, and he makes the picture haguely entertaining. While it will go especially well with children, it will also be mighty interesting entertainment for nearly everyone. The dog goes about his work with a lot of pop, and apparently enjoys everything he does. He sees a table, fries an egg, warms up the baby's milk, and then serves the kid's meal. This is only one of a long list of stunts that the animal puts over, and which are sure fire stuff. It should be a very attractive number for any kind of a house.

"The Gun Runners"—C. B. C. Film Sales Corp.

Type of production...............................................2 reel western

This short feature is one of the Star Ranch brand, and has for its featured performers, C. Edward Hatton and Frances Parks. It's a typical western story, with much originality, but it's the type they want where westerns are popular. The suspense is held all the way and there is considerable excitement throughout all of it, after a slow start. Hatton is a good cowboy hero and the girl looks real pretty. The story is of a Texas Ranger who is sent to round up a bunch of gun runners. He conceals his identity and captures one of the gang. With the villains he mingles with the gang and then is himself captured, when they discover his identity. He is saved from death by the rangey and after a fast ride by the girl. It's well enough acted and will get over all right with western fans.

Kinetoscopes—"Trip of the U. S. S. Idaho"—Kinetoscope

Type of production...............................................1 reel pictorial magazine

The cameraman has taken a trip aboard the Idaho, to Brazil for this reel, and has photographed every event of importance that took place aboard ship. It is the story of a man of war that was carrying the Brazilian President, Dr. Pessoa, back to his native land. All of the shots are interesting, and splendidly photographed. First comes a view of the big ship steamboat the Brooklyn going out of New York harbor, then a shot of the officers, and shots of all portions of the boat. The Marines are seen at abandon ship drill, and there is an inspection of the entire crew by Dr. Pessoa and the ship's commander. The ship's big canvas swimming pool with members of the crew being duxed and generally rough-housed, makes a humorous bit. The end of the reel shows the arrival of the vessel at Rio de Janeiro, and the reception by some of the Brazilian fleet. It's a first rate reel for any program.

Charles Urban’s "Movie Chats"—22nd series—Kinetoscope

Type of production...............................................1 reel magazine

This issue starts off in England, Enroute to Bristol, the cameraman stops off at the town of Clifton, and the first subject is made up of views of that place, showing a big bridge that spans the Avon River, many of the public buildings, the art gallery, and a number of shots of the animals in the Clifton zoo. This latter part shows some little known animals from all parts of the world, and is an interesting bit. The next subject shows a good bit of the salmon fishing industry in British Columbia. The huge nets full of fish are loaded aboard ship and taken the cannery, and the whole process of cleaning, cutting and canning the salmon is shown. This also is an interesting bit of footage. The remaining footage of the reel is devoted to Blackpool which is described as the "Coney Island of England. Nothing especially good about this part, but the reel as a whole should be very satisfactory.

Kinetoscope—"Rio de Janiero, Capitol of Brazil"—Kinetoscope

Type of production...............................................1 reel travelogue

In this one the spectator takes a sight seeing trip around the city of Rio de Janiero, in company with a half dozen U. S. Marines. About every point of interest is visited, but there isn't anything unusual or particularly interesting about any of the shots. Starting off, is made up the "Broadway of Rio" through the older parts of town, and through the residential district where many fine homes are seen. The last subject shows some neat buildings, views of the parks and palmetted drives are shown, and the end cuts with a panoramic view of the harbor. A fair travel reel.

CHRISTIE COMEDIES

One reason for "The Reckless Sex," Al Christie's new two-reeler distributed through Educational exchanges.—Adv.

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

Altoona, Pa.—"If you fail to read these advertisements of Altoona's live merchants, you will pay the 'Penalty' of missing some real bargains."

This slogan, in large type, was printed across two pages of the Tribune, on Feb. 7 and 9 the first and last day of the showing of "The Penalty" at the Strand. The double-page truck was occupied with advertisements from a dozen of Altoona's most prominent merchants, with the Strand's ad in the middle. The ad for "The Penalty" varied on the two days, while most of the merchants ads remained the same.

Winnipeg.—One of the exploitation stunts conceived by Ted Hardcastle, manager of Associated Producers, exchange, and the Rialto management, for the opening of the theater with "The Last of the Mohicans," was the giving of a special performance for 2,000 Boy Scouts, in conjunction with the Free Press, leading newspaper of Winnipeg. The Rialto management was especially proud of this stunt because they established a precedent by breaking into the front page of the newspapers. Other special exploitation was the giving of a Saturday morning matinee to the children of Winnipeg at reduced admission prices.

Pathe and Selznick News succeeded in bringing pictures of Harding’s inauguration at New York theatre on the night of the ceremony. The Selznick aeroplane arrived in New York from Washington ahead of the Pathé plane, but the latter’s laboratory work was faster, with the result that the pictures were distributed ahead of Selznick. The Keith houses, however, showed the Selznick reel around.

Pathe issued a partial list of the houses along Broadway that secured the film. The pictures were delivered by four messengers in taxis. The pictures reached the following houses and were signed for at the following times: Strand, 7:35; Rialto, 7:40; Capitol, 7:48; Strand, Brooklyn, 8:18; Fox’s Academy, 8:30; 77th St., 9:18; Adelphi, 9:20; Symphony, 9:22; Broadway Photoplays, 9:25; Olympia, 9:27; Yorke, 9:30; 9:30, and 9:50, and Majestic, 185th St. and St. Nicholas Ave., 10:00.

Fox on Sunday supplied local trunk lines, and was able to get in the entire Poli circuit in New England with a 400 ft. print of the inauguration. The early Saturday morning trains for Washington, Philadelphia and Boston were caught and the pictures delivered on time for Saturday matinees.

Both Fox and Kinograms made no effort to deliver the pictures through the west by aeroplane, as Pathe had arranged for.

To Shoot Scenes in England
Hugo Ballin plans a trip to England to shoot the final scenes on “Jane Eyre,” the first scenes of which were shot in San Francisco. Ballin has already started work on “Ave Maria” and will make both pictures simultaneously. Mahon Ballin will appear in both productions which will be distributed through Hodkinson.

"The Kid" Released Generally in New York—said to be Unprecedented for Six Reelers

Charlie Chaplin's "The Kid," was released generally in New York yesterday. St. Louis and Edward began showing the picture, day and date.

Film men were of the opinion that this is absolutely without precedent in film history, so far as a six reel feature is concerned. The unusual number of simultaneous showings includes the Boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx only. The picture is not released in Brooklyn until March 14.

James R. Grainger is handling bookings on the picture in Chaplin's behalf.

Hart Not Retiring Permanently

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Los Angeles—Edwin Schallert in an interview with William E. Hart says in the "Los Angeles Express":

"The impression that Mr. Hart is retiring from the screen for good is absolutely erroneous. He is now practically at the height of his career, and if he decided to retire would probably be forced very shortly to accede to offers tendered him.

"I don't want to come to the Sarah Bernhardt class of farewell actors," said Hart. "When I decide to quit I really want to quit. And I am not leaving for good now."

Madge Tyrone, staff writer at the Louis B. Mayer studios, has so far recovered from her recent automobile accident that she has been removed from the Clara Barton Hospital and is now a convalescent at home.

Work was started last week on the construction of the new administration buildings for the Pacific Film Co. at Culver City, Cal. The main office building which is to be 50 ft. square will be of the Spanish style of architecture. There will be imposing frontage on Venice Blvd. and trolley-way, while the center of the plot will be occupied by fountains and flowers.

Bill's Passage Sure

Governor Miller, Senator Lusk, the majority leader in the upper house and Speaker Machold of the Assembly, have held a conference on the subject of censorship and it is said that they are in favor of such legislation and have suggested to Clayton that with a few amendments they would support his measure. As the result of this conference, Clayton has made the changes in his bill and in its new form it will probably pass both branches of the legislature.

According to present plans, state censorship will start Aug. 1.

The bill in its amended form provides for the appointment of a commission of three members who will have the power to name deputies. Their salaries are to be $7,500 a year, and they will serve for five years.

Each film will be taxed $3 a reel.

Under the first bill introduced by Clayton, each film would have been taxed $5 a reel. Advertisements will also come under the regulation of the board.

Acombination of Western capitalists acting in association with Leyford Gaige, publisher of several novels, and Boyd Gurlay, for several years a publisher of newspapers in the West and Middle West, will begin production on a large scale with the series of big specials with Miss Murray.

Work on the picture will begin immediately in the Amsterdam Studios, 340 W. 44th St., and all of the pictures will be made in the East, according to present plans. Four stories by authors of national reputation are under consideration and it is likely that the first picture will be the work of a distinguished author.

Additional Opinions

"The Four Horsemen of the Apoc- lypse"—Metro—Lyric Theater.

DAILY NEWS— A conventional bit of Bessie, Vicente Blanca grew to life on the screen of the Lyric theater Sunday night.

"The Nut"—United Artists Strand.

MAIL—It may not be the best thing that Fairbanks has done, but it is not far short of being the funniest.

POST—It starts off with a good kick, but many inventions are rather wearisome, especially when they are made paramour to the situation. It is a topsy-turvy method, like the dooryard riding the man.

GLOBE—It is the sort of comedy that could never be interpreted to a foreigner. By the time you have finished explaining the title alone, the film would be over. But this peculiarity improves it if anything for home consumption if you judge from the hordes of Fairbanks fans that fought to get into the Strand on Sunday.

EVENING WORLD—Just as eccentric and funny as ever.

POST—Until "The Gilded Lily" snaps its neck over a trick ending it is a good photoplay.

GLOBE—"The Gilded Lily" may amuse you in spots where it is intended to thrill, but it cannot possibly bore you, and it is pictorially a delight to the eye.

EVENING WORLD—"Gilded Lily" film, Mae Murray leading, has striking dances.

"Chickens"—F. P. L. Rialto

MAIL—This capable young actor is worthy of a better vehicle than "Chickens." Douglas MacLean looks far too intelligent to do things he is compelled by the story to perform. All in all, it is considerably below the standard of his work when Doris May was his co-star.

POST—It is ever so clean and simple, and its fun probably comes under the heading of the "homey type." Its plot and dramatic qualities are negligible. Mr. MacLean should get something worthier of his fresh, good-natured talents.

GLOBE—Most of the real comedy in this somewhat labored plot is furnished by the love interest of the title role.

EVENING WORLD—The feature is Douglas MacLean in "Chickens," a pleasing mixture of fun and sentiment.

"Buried Treasure" at the B'way.

"Buried Treasure," which has played four weeks at the Criterion, will be shown at the Broadway beginning Monday, March 14. The picture has been kept at all the Keith, Moss and Proctor theaters.

Hough Writes Story for Moore

Maxine Alton of the Alton Play Bureau, Inc., has sold Will M. Hough's first original story, "The Forgetters," which was especially written for Owen Moore, to Selznick. Negotiations are said to be under way for a long term contract for Hough with a well-known producing company.

Pollock at International

Leo A. Pollock has been appointed manager of publicity for Cosmopolitan Prod., having recently resigned as director of publicity for Fox's coast studios. Pollock was formerly with the Evening World and the New York American, Associated with him as assistant is Morris R. Werner, formerly of the Tribune.

In the Courts

Judge Augustus N. Hand, in the U. S. District Court at New York, has handed down a decision refusing to enjoin the Sunrise Pictures Corp., from making “At the Mercy of the Rims” into a motion picture. The application for injunction was made by Isaac Silverman, who claimed to have purchased the rights to the book.

Two Brooklyn theater owners have been granted permanent injunctions by the Supreme Court restraining officers and members of the Moving Picture Operators’ Union from picketing their houses or otherwise interfering with their performances. The beneficiaries are the Pulaski Amusement Co. and the C. & S. Amusement Co., the latter owner of the Empress.

Chileans Want New Films

(Special to WID’S DAILY)

Los Angeles—Richard Barrows, special commissioner of the Chilean government, spoke last week before the Chamber of Commerce and explained in detail the conditions to be met and conquered if Los Angeles is to figure in the trade of the west coast countries.

He said that as Los Angeles is the capital of the picture industry South Americans’ desires regarding motion pictures should be studied. He defined the custom of film exporters in sending old pictures to South America and said that many of these reels have been shown on the screen for years, that the Chilean people realize this and object to it.

Following the completion of the script, Miss Bergere will begin work on her first Ouida Bergere Prod. Not only will she direct this, but her own story will be adapted for the first film story, entitled “Sweethearts and Wives.” It was reported yesterday that the pictures would be distributed through Hodgkinson, but at the latter offices it was stated no definite arrangements had been made.

Gov't Enters Films
Belgium, to Form Own Picture Organization—News to Consul Here

The Associated Press reports from Brussels, Belgium:

"The government proposes to create a national moving picture film organization to buy direct from the producers and lease films to moving picture theaters. The decision is the result of the hostility of film concern to the law subjecting films to censorship and the tax of one sou a meter."

The office of the Belgian Consul, 25 Madison Ave., was first informed of the Associated Press dispatch by WID'S DAILY yesterday. No information could be secured from his office.

One film man whose activities in the European market are very extensive, stated yesterday that he had heard the move on the part of the Belgian Government, but pointed out that practically all dealings, affecting Belgium were conducted through Gaumont in Paris.

In the Courts

The final chapter has been written in the suit brought by Charles E. Blaney, theatrical producer, against Fox Film Corp., applying for an injunction to restrain Fox from using the title, "The Man Who Dared." Fox recently produced and released a picture bearing this title with William Russell as the star, and Blaney applied for an injunction prohibiting its use on the ground that he owned a play entitled "The Man Who Dared." The case came up before Judge Hotchkiss, who rendered a decision denying the application for injunction.

Blaney appealed the case to the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court and that court has just handed down a decision unanimously affirming the order of Judge Hotchkiss that an injunction be denied.

The complaint in the suit of Walter T. Twm against Harvey H. Hevener and Arland W. Johnson in connection with their unsuccessful scheme to finance a string of film theaters in the leading cities, has been filed in the Supreme Court. Mrs. Twm win demands $150,000 on the ground that he and the defendants were to divide the profits equally. He believes they have each realized that sum.

Olive Tell has obtained a judgment in the City Court against Benj. A. Rolfe for $1,466. She alleges that an accounting between them last September showed $1,935 due her and that he has since paid $300.

Gail Kane has sued the P. W. Picture in the Supreme Court for $2,500 for services rendered for the film, "A Good Woman," which she says the defendant refuses to pay.

A summons has been filed in the Supreme Court in a suit of Harry Leven against Universal where the cause of action is not stated. H. J., and F. E. Goldsmith are the attorneys.

The Consolidated Amusement Enterprises, which operates a film theater at 615 8th Ave., has been sued in the Supreme Court for $5,000 by Mrs. Laura Brooks for the death of her husband. Charles Brooks, who she alleges was ejected from the balcony in the defendant's theater so forcibly on Oct. 16 last that he died.

From Hartford Station comes word that David Hartford and his retinue of players have arrived at the Sierra Nevada location which is to be utilized for the remaining exterior scenes for "The Golden Snare."

Contrary to recent report Dorothy Devore, who now and then appears in a feature production, has not left Christy Comedies. Fred W. Jackman, who was badly bitten by a dog while shooting scenes in the snow at Truckee, has been kept from his duties as Mack Sennett's chief cameraman and confined to his bed for several days.

Specials Only

Planned by Whitman Bennett—Lionel Barrymore Completes Contract—For 1st Nat’l Release

Whitman Bennett plans to make all-star specials only in the future.

Lionel Barrymore has completed his contract with Mr. Bennett for a series of pictures. These were the only ones of Barrymore’s productions Bennett made.

Work is now under way on “Salvation Bell,” in which Pauline Starke appears. After that Bennett will make “The Price” with an all-star cast.

This production will be released through First National. A number of other plays are being considered by Bennett for future production. All the, he plans to make live a year. There is a possibility that, later on, he will go to Europe. That move, however, is entirely dependent upon development in foreign picture making.

It is understood reliably that all of the Bennett specials will go through First National, the company that has been handling the producer’s pictures to date.

Blames Associates

Himmel Says Americans Failed to Stick By Him—Local Office Closed

Andre Himmel blames his American associates for the failure of the Franco-American Cinematographic Corp. to succeed. In a copyrighted wireless dispatch published in the New York Times, Himmel says that if they had not withdrawn when investigations began to be made as to the accuracy of his statements of its prospects he would have succeeded in making the corporation a going concern.

Before the magistrate he denied all charges of having availed himself of the American.

"It is true," he told the magistrate, "that I received money from M. Rivory, but I can completely justify the use I have made of his funds. Every cent was spent within the terms of the contract."

When asked to explain how he ever hoped to succeed with the corporation, he replied:

"My affairs were going admirably, and I would have succeeded if I had not been beaten by the Americans."

The Times also reported that a meeting of the American directors of the company was held on Wednesday, at which a vote of confidence was voiced in Himmel. The newspaper says it is impossible to ascertain who the directors were.

The office of the company in the Fitzgerald Bldg. was closed yesterday afternoon. No one could be reached for a statement.

No Christie Features

Educat's States Only One and Two Reel Comedies Will Be Made in Next Six Months

Educational, distributor of Christie Comedies, in a statement yesterday said in part:

"It is announced that Al Christie, head of the Christie Film Co., will devote his entire attention for the next six months and the entire resources of his organization to the creation of one and two reel comedies for release through Educational."

"Although both parties are reported to have been entirely satisfied with relations since they came together, it is said that the understanding between the producing company and the distributing organization has been made at a basis on which Al Christie will devote his personal attention to the direction of the two reels."

The Christie studios made two long reel features for Robertson-Cole release. These were "So Long Letty" and "See My Lawyer." It appeared to be the general impression in the local film circles that the Christie were going into feature production as a regular thing.

Situation Eases Up
Iowa and Nebraska Legislatures Look
On Adverse Film Legislation in More Rational Light
(Exclusive to WID'S DAILY)

Omaha, Neb.—The legislatures of Iowa and Nebraska have come out in open opposition to stringent cens-sorship by state boards, although in both states it seems certain that some kind of censorship legislation will be forthcoming this year.

In Nebraska the most stringent bill will be amended to leave the enforcement of the law in the hands of state, county and local authorities. This will give picture men the right to report to the courts in the event of an unfair ruling—a refuge which was denied them in the original bill.

In Iowa the original bill was regarded as too drastic and was suppessed in committee. It is now proposed to draft a committee bill that will meet the more serious objections to films of a questionable character.

The bill taxing all amusements
1 cent on each 50 cents or fraction thereof of admission has been reported out, passed its first reading and seems certain of passage.

Clayton Seeks Speedy Action
(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Albany, N. Y.—Assemblyman Clayton of Brooklyn, the introducer of the bill providing for a board of cens-sorship, in a statement says:

"I have received hundreds of letters from Chambers of Commerce, taxpayers and civic associations, Hebrew societies, women's clubs and other organizations endorsing my motion picture censorship bill. Strange to say that I have not received a word in opposition to the proposed law and no requests have been received asking for a hearing on the subject and none will be held unless one is desired by some of the interests which may be against the passage of the bill. I will urge the committee Ways and Means to take action and report the bill as soon as possible so there will be no delay in its progress.

Unofficial Censors
What Oklahoma Educators Have Accomplished in That State's School System

Prof. James W. Shepard, head of the visual instruction department at the University of Oklahoma and chairman of the executive committee of the Oklahoma Visual Instruction Association, in an interview said:

"Thirty schools received the film service of the Visual Instruction Association this year and seventy have joined for the coming term," said Prof. Shepard yesterday. "The picture censors are not an unofficial body composed of a woman teacher, past middle age, a mother and myself. We act as liaison officers between the association and the distributing agencies, make recommendations and supply the schools when they want pictures. "We are on good terms with the exhibitors and our recommendations carry weight with them as well as with the school directors. We do not tolerate immoral pictures but we want them to be clever and alive as well as clean. One of the pictures that pleased us most was a Charles Ray film of the star indulged in a very real fight. We believe our Oklahoma unofficial censorship system is good because it is founded on a basis of intelligent good-will."

At It Again

first stunt yesterday on behalf of "A that was visible of the Fox picture's title was the word "Connecticut." A large crowd was attracted by the stunt.

73,000 Francs Left

And Himmel Started Out With 1,800,000, Say French Police Officials

The world yesterday published the following dispatch from Paris:

"Inquiry by the police in connection with the case of André Himmel, reputed General Manager of the Franco-American Cinematograph Corp., has revealed that 1,800,000 francs was deposited by Frenchmen in the American Bank in Paris to the account of Himmel of which, according to the police, only 73,000 francs remain on deposit. The money represented investments in Himmel's cinematograph projects. "Himmel was arrested recently on his arrival at Havre from New York on the charge of having missed more than 1,000,000 francs invested in the corporation by a Frenchman named Rivary, who caused his arrest."

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor demurs to the show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

Boston, Mass.—Ace Berry put over an extensive publicity and exploitation campaign for “Kismet” at the Majestic. Arabs in native costume were around the city for two weeks, doing a blotter distribution morning, and blocking traffic downtown by using their prayer rugs at Boston’s busiest corners. Berry had them at a big athletic meet at which time they issued challenges to wrestle any one of the mat champs. This stunt got notices in all the sport pages.

The “prayer stunt” broke for news stories 3,000 newsmen were tagged for several days with “Have you seen Kismet?” An event well advertised for the opening was the presence of the governor of Massachusetts and the mayor of Boston.

Omaha, Neb.—During the week that “Heliotrope” was playing at the Des Moines, safe-blowers one night blew the safe and escaped with $3,400. Not to be floored by his misfortune, Manager Arthur Stolte of the Des Moines took advantage of the wide publicity given the robbery, and ran an advertisement denying that it was a “press-agent stunt,” and inviting the public to inspect the office where the safe was blown. As an overcharge of “soup” had been used in the robbery, the office was a sight.

He also took the mangled safe and put it on the sidewalk in front of his handsome theater, decorating the safe with a sign which read: “Did Heliotrope Harry Do This Job?”

Boston, Mass.—For the showing of “The Devil” at Gordon’s Old South Church, Manager McGiniss took advantage of many channels of exploitation. An extensive teaser campaign was used in the newspapers for two weeks, with a big quarter page splash at the end of that time. A stunt that attracted much attention was a big limousine wired and lighted in red, which toured the city bearing one of the theater ushers wearing silk hat and costume similar to that worn by Mr. Arians on the stage. The sign was visible for four blocks in every direction and made a striking display. Several ushers were dressed like Mr. Arians in the picture, arousing comment from patrons of the theater.

Different Attitude

Now Missouri M. P. T. O. Stands By Cohen—Previously Commended William A. Brady

In a wire received from Charles T. Sears, president, and Adolph M. Eisner, of the M. P. T. O. of Missouri, that organization reverses the stand taken earlier in the week when William A. Brady was in St. Louis. The wire said:

"We are whole-hearted in our support of the M. P. T. O. and President Sydney S. Cohen. We strongly condemn attempts of Brady and the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry to bar exhibitors and see in this propaganda, an organized effort to disrupt all exhibitor organizations. The M. P. T. O. of Missouri are in accord with the policies, attitude and actions of the M. P. T. O. and its officers. This is the sentiment of every independent exhibitor in the state of Missouri."

Joseph Mogler sent a copy of the original resolution to Cohen. It was stated that the M. P. T. O. of Missouri approved of Brady's attitude on censorship.

A delightful, high-grade farce, insuring a corner in laughs wherever shown. Star stunning and cast capable. A lavishly appointed domestic drama, generous with complex situations cleverly coordinated and entertainingly developed. Direction by Sam Wood.

"The Outside Woman" is a picture far above the grade of the average comedy-drama and of the high calibre that is making conspicuous practically every picture play coming currently from Re?lart.

Wanda Hawley, dainty as a Dresden china figurine and as delicate of person, but lively of movement, is one of the cleverest comedienesses yet brought to the screen. There is a novelty of plot with characteristic good development, a liveliness of action that crowds one complication upon another, a cast which plays with a keen appreciation of the play's possibilities, and backgrounds highly artistic.

The picture is a radical departure from "The Snob." The part of "Puss", Ralston, which Miss Hawley is that of a

Some Good Comedy Bits, But Not Enough To Make “The Nut” Big

Douglas Fairbanks in
"THE NUT"
United Artists

DIRECTOR ......................... Ted Reed
AUTHOR ......................... Kenneth Davenport
SCENARIO BY............. William Parker and Lotta Woods
CAMERAMAN.............. Harry Thorpe and William McGann

AS A WHOLE........ Not up to the usual standard of Fairbanks entertainment; laughs too few and far between

STORY...... Doesn’t give star the kind of a part he needs; not enough of it for feature length

DIRECTION...... Fair; hasn’t distributed his laughs advantageously

PHOTOGRAPHY .................... All right
LIGHTINGS .................. Several sets poorly lighted
CAMERA WORK ................. Average
STAR.......... Gets over some good comedy stunts but nowhere near enough to carry the picture

SUPPORT...... Marguerite Delamotte, leading lady, who hasn’t much to do; others adequate

EXTERIORS ..................... Not very many
INTERIORS ...................... All right

DETAIL .......................... Fair

CHARACTER OF STORY...... Hero in love with girl, goes to extremes to introduce her to rich people she wants to meet

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ....... 5,800 feet

After “The Mark of Zorro” Doug is likely to disappoint his admirers with “The Nut.” It isn’t exactly his fault either, for the story, in the first place, isn’t there. It’s not big enough for a feature picture and it doesn’t provide the star with the sort of opportunities which allow him to employ his usual line of comedy stunts and certainly doesn’t tax his athletic ability.

The main reason for “The Nut’s” failure to meet up with the usual Fairbanks entertainment is that it isn’t consistently funny. There’s a stretch of comedy with some real laughs and then there’s a long sober stretch with hardly a chuckle. At the Strand the heartiest laughter was accorded the sequence in which Doug goes to a wax museum to rent some “dummies.” The proprietor refuses to rent them, so Doug stays around until closing time, joins a group of figures and remains so that even the clean-up man doesn’t observe him. Later he exits through the cellar with three figures, one a “cop.” Crossing the street Doug drops the officer in the middle of the street. It lands on its feet and with hand upstretched, stops all the traffic. This is the biggest laugh in the picture.

Doug is in love with a girl who has a theory that if the rich people would take a number of poor children into their homes for an hour or so each day, the environment would cause the children to grow up properly. But Estrell Wynn, the sweetheart, does not know these rich people and in order to make good with Estrell, Doug volunteers to arrange a meeting. Doug decides that impersonators will do as well as the real people. His first attempt is to hire some men who turn out to be gamblers and burglars.

Hero finally resorts to using dummy figures to represent the rich men, but Estrell can’t be fooled and becomes indignant. One of the rich men Estrell wants to meet is working his way as a cub reporter. He is sent out after a story regarding a man who was seen dragging a body through the streets. Doug is the man, and one of the dummies the body. In this way Doug meets the man he’s after, makes good with Estrell and she consents to marry him.

They’ll Like Doug, But They Expect A Better One From Him

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

It shouldn’t be necessary to advise exhibitors how to put over a Fairbanks picture. His name should be sufficient to fill your house and even though they may be somewhat disappointed with “The Nut,” especially after his last picture “The Mark of Zorro” which was so splendid, they will get some good laughs out of Doug’s efforts to satisfy his sweetheart’s ambition.

The title may prove interesting to your patrons so you might give it equal importance with the star’s name. If they like to know something about the story before hand catchlines should attract: “If your sweetheart insisted upon knowing the richest people in your city and you couldn’t arrange a meeting, what would you do? Doug tries various stunts in ‘The Nut.’ See how he puts it over.”
Good Production of Typical Broadway Life Story

Mae Murray in
"THE GILDED LILY"

Robert Z. Leonard Prod.—Paramount

DIRECTOR .................. Robert Z. Leonard
AUTHOR ...................... Clara Beranger
SCENARIO BY ................ Clara Beranger
CAMERAMAN .................. Ernest Haller

AS A WHOLE.... Will please those who like stories of Broadway life; is extremely theatrical in atmosphere

STORY...... Not ingenious of itself, but provides a part which gives the star opportunities to which she is best suited

DIRECTION..... Adequate; best in connection with settings

PHOTOGRAPHY ............... Very good
LIGHTINGS .................... Good
CAMERA WORK .................. Satisfactory

STAR...... Is pleasing; dramatic acting not impressive

SUPPORT....... Lowell Sherman the best; cast well suited

EXTERIORS .................. Few
INTERIORS .................. Good sets

DETAIL ...................... All right

CHARACTER OF STORY..... Broadway favorite gives up gay life for man she loves but returns to it when disillusioned

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ...... 6,500 feet

Sooner or later it seems that every producer wants to take a whack at a story of the White Way, and in "The Gilded Lily" Robert Leonard has used an original story by Clara Beranger with Mae Murray playing the Lily. The story isn't unusually strong but has a cleaner atmosphere than some of its predecessors, similar in theme. The Lily is a typical Broadway salamander who gets all she can but gives nothing but "encouragement."

The part gives Mae Murray several opportunities to perform the dances for which she is best known and director Leonard has seen to it that the proper settings have been provided. Those depicting the Cafe Royal, a private club, are along lavish lines and again when the Lily returns to her former gay life, her dance in a fashionable cabaret, a big set is used. Mae Murray is seen in a sort of bubble dance. Her costumes in these sequences are apt to cause a bit of a sensation, particularly in smaller communities. The atmosphere is essentially theatrical but there is a touch of home life in the fact that the Lily really wants a little home and a husband to love.

Lillian Drake, known as "The Lily," is hostess of the Cafe Royal. Creighton Howard and John Stewart are men about town, admirers of the Lily. Frank Thompson, a country boy, having his fling of Broadway life, is in love with the Lily and she with him. In fact she gives up her place in the club, redecorates her apartment according to the life she intends leading in the future and prepares to become Mrs. Thompson.

Creighton Howard tries hard to make the Lily realize that Thompson is not worthy of her and that he is already engaged to a girl in his home town. The Lily refuses to listen and when Thompson comes to her, intoxicated, and insists that he wants her as she was when he first met her, the Lily becomes "gilded" again and returns to the cabaret. While going through her performance the girl collapses and is taken to her dressing room.

She is approached by Howard who asks her regarding her future. She tells him she doesn't care what becomes of her. He insists that she come with him. He takes her to his home where she is welcomed by his mother and eventually she falls in love with Howard. Jason Robard, Charles Gerard and Leonora Ottinger are in the cast.

Use Miss Murray’s Name Extensively And Catchlines Will Attract

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You have probably played pictures similar to "The Gilded Lily" and if your folks liked them, they'll surely like "The Gilded Lily." Mae Murray is a popular favorite and her name will attract a good number. You can play up the idea of the Broadway favorite who wanted a cozy home and how after she thought she had one, she was disillusioned by the man she loved. If you played "On With the Dance" and pleased them, you can feel safe in offering them this one. Also "Idols of Clay" can be recalled as another of the star's recent pictures.

The title can be made good use of and used in connection with lines such as: "She was willing to give up her gay life for the comforts of a real home and the love of a husband, but just when she thought she had that which she wanted most, she was compelled to return to the old life. See Mae Murray in her latest picture, 'The Gilded Lily.'"

DETAIL ...................... All right
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Rich society man decides to manage chicken farm, loses his money but is saved by country sweetheart
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ....... 4,753 feet

Douglas MacLean’s latest is an adaptation of Herschel Hall’s Saturday Evening Post story “Yanconna Yillies,” and it’s a sure thing the new title is a much better one. It’s liable to keep them guessing as to just what “Chickens” refers to. They may be fooled when they see it actually deals with the feathered creatures. “Chickens” hasn’t the fun of some of Mac-Lean’s previous pictures. The first reels are rather slow and at the Rialto there wasn’t a laugh until pretty well into the third reel when the hero gets into actual operation of the chicken “ranch.”

Once they get into the story, however, there is some good comedy of the rural variety. Doug feeds the foul strychnine by mistake but instead of killing them, it proves a fine incentive for laying eggs and the yards are littered with eggs. Doug decides they only needed “pep.” Another good bit is the hero’s dream when he sees giant chickens and geese entering his room. In another instance they employ the slow motion photography and if you’ve ever had a sensation in which you dreamed someone was chasing you but your legs refused to carry you to safety fast enough, you’ll appreciate this bit.

The director has done fairly well but he missed some good chances for comedy, especially in connection with the bazar sequence. There are some pretty shots of real country and it’s a clean, wholesome picture, right through.

Deems Stanwood has the chicken “ranch” going satisfactorily when suddenly he is advised that he has lost all the other money he had. Willie Figg, Deems’ rival for the hand of Julia Stoneman, holds a mortgage on the farm, and when he hears of Deems’ loss he decides to foreclose the mortgage and drive Deems’ out of town, clearing the way for his own wooing of Julia.

But Julia loves Deems and she gets Willie to sell her the mortgage. He agrees, thinking she will marry him (Willie), and they will live on the farm. But Julia seizes the cancelled mortgage into Deems’ coat and when he discovers it he realizes that Julia did it and that she must be in love with him. She is riding with Willie when Deems confronts her. Julia admits she loves Deems and Willie is left in the lurch.

The Title Is A Good One To Play With
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This isn’t an uproar of a comedy and not as good as some of MacLean’s previous pictures, and perhaps it doesn’t contain as many laughs as his last, “The Rookie’s Return,” but if you play it you can be sure you’re showing a wholesome, clean comedy offering with a pleasing star and a rural atmosphere with the sort of country nonsense that still satisfies a good many.

You have a good title to work with and it can be used with teaser lines in fine fashion. Say: “There’s ‘Chickens’ at the blank theater. What kind of ‘Chickens?’ Don’t miss it. Go and see for yourself.” Or, “Ever try feeding your ‘Chickens’ strychnine? Maybe they need it. See what it did to the ‘Chickens’ in Douglas MacLean’s latest picture.” For the benefit of those who may have read the story in the Saturday Evening Post you might mention it’s original title and the author;

CHARACTER OF STORY..... Man’s wayward brother conspires with former’s enemies to steal both his wife and his name
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION..... About 6,400 feet

Following close upon the production “Kazan,” comes another one for the box office, called “The Mask.” It is another William N. Selig production and Bertram Bracken again proves he knows a thing or two about directing. “The Mask” as a story isn’t new to the screen, that is in its general idea—that of the two brothers, twins, who are so alike that even the wife of the one doesn’t recognize the brother when he poses as her husband. However, it is the way the material has been handled, the new twists injected, a bit of heart interest here and a thrill there, that makes “The Mask” different.

There are one or two errors, probably due to cutting, which rather confuse the spectator in grasping the story. They should be corrected, a sub-title in each case should be sufficient to make clear the meaning. One player remarks, “I have bribed the chief stoker and he will stop the ship.” Instead of the vessel stopping, it blows up. There is no explanation for this. And again when the wayward brother is hired by his brother’s enemies to impersonate the latter, there is no explanation as to how the enemies got in touch with the degenerate one.

Jack Holt does splendid work in the dual role while Hedda Nova is sincere as the wife. “Mickey” Moore is a bright little youngsters who’ll delight everybody. Fred Malatesta is all that a villain need be.

Kenneth Traynor goes to South Africa to investigate conditions in a diamond mine in which he is interested. He is about to return home when he meets a wayward twin brother, Jack, who starts home with him. The ship is blown up and everyone reported lost. Signor Keralio, a friend of Kenneth Traynor’s, suddenly surprises Kenneth’s wife with the news that her husband has been saved. In reality it is Jack Traynor. He has conspired with Keralio to impersonate his brother, for which Keralio agrees to pay him well, Keralio’s purpose being to secure Kenneth’s wife for himself.

Actually the real husband, Kenneth, returns but is demented. He visits his home and is recognized by his son, Mickey. Keralio sees Kenneth with the boy and brings them both to his apartment, then sends for Mrs. Traynor, gives her a glimpse of her real husband and boy. He is forcing his attentions upon the wife when Kenneth suddenly becomes his normal self, recognizes his boy and rushes to his wife’s rescue.

You Can Offer Them A Good Variety Of Interest In This
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The State Rights market has another good box office picture in “The Mask,” and you should be able to clean up on it. There is a good variety of interest in the story and it contains the sort of material that has a direct audience appeal. And the production is all that could be desired. You can promise them human interest, a few thrills and a certain amount of mystery. Be sure to tell them about the boy, “Mickey” Moore. They’ll like him.

Use the names of Hedda Nova and Jack Holt, telling them about the latter’s dual role. He does real good work. Hedda Nova’s performance, too, is sincere. Catchlines and stills in the lobby should attract. Say: “A wayward fellow impersonates his twin brother to the extent of fooling even the man’s wife, but ‘The Mask’ didn’t deceive his brother’s child.”
WID'S says:

"THE dog," says WID'S, speaking of the Century Comedy, "THE KID'S PAL," "is probably the best performing animal that has ever been seen in pictures and he makes the picture hugely entertaining. He sets a table, fries an egg, warms the baby's milk, and then serves the kid's meal. This is only one of a long list of stunts that the animal puts over, and which are sure-fire stuff. It should be a very attractive number for any kind of a house."

DIRECTOR .................... Millard Webb
AUTHOR ..................... Charles Dickens
SCENARIO BY ................ F. McGrew Willis

CHARACTER OF STORY. Dickens’ “Oliver Twist” with characters brought up to the present day.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION. About 4,200 feet.

In attempting to bring into a modern atmosphere the characters and situations of Dickens’ famous story, and in trying to make them conform to present day American life, a big part of the charm and the interest is lost. One reason is that considered in the light of the present day the happenings of the story seem harsh. Another reason is that in transferring the tale to the screen, they haven’t instilled enough action to hold it up over the full distance. Lovers of Dickens are going to find the piece lacking altogether in the art that makes his work great.

There are some parts where dramatic situations are developed in good shape, and several semi-climaxes have been built up in a way that will keep the audience interested, but the more discerning will probably find a number of the big scenes mechanical in appearance. At several points the continuity lacks coherence, as for instance, when Oliver is shot and taken into the Morris home he tells them to inform his benefactor of his whereabouts. The following sequences find Oliver well dressed and happy, but neither his benefactor nor the Marris family is responsible as far as the audience knows.

The characters of Fagin, Bill Sykes and the Artful Dodger all have their representatives—by other names—in the picture, and all are as nearly correct as the modern atmosphere permits.

As for Harold Goodwin, who makes here his first appearance as a star, he gives good promise of becoming a popular hero. He has a likeable and really magnetic personality, and in one or two of his scenes gives a hint that he possesses dramatic ability and considerable versatility. He carries off the scene in which he runs away from the orphanage, leaving his only friend, in a highly commendable bit of acting. Throughout the whole picture the star is easily the largest factor in sustaining the interest. The rest of the cast, which is quite large, are just fair, considering all of their work. Lillian Hall is pretty but has a very short part. Irene Hunt, as Nancy, has one bit of emotional acting that she does well.

From the third reel on there is well maintained suspense. The action picks up a lot at this point and with the exception of one bit it will undoubtedly hold them up to the finish, although it cannot be said that at any time there is any broad appeal to the story in its modern garb. The general opinion, after seeing the picture, will likely be a wish that it had been done in the original setting and atmosphere.

Use Title, Author And Introduce A New Star

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The story of “Oliver Twist” is so famous and its author so widely read that it will probably require nothing but the title of the picture and Charles Dickens’ name to put it over. Tell them that it is a modern version of the story, with all the well known characters represented in present day types. It will be well to let it go at that as far as the story is concerned, leaving the judgment of the modernized version to your patrons. In the picture you are introducing a new star, and you can arouse interest by this fact.

Tell them that Goodwin has been seen in support of Mary Pickford in “Suds” and “Heart of the Hills,” and also with Wallace Reid, Dorothy Gish and Tom Mix. Familiar incidents of the story, such as Oliver asking for a second bowl of soup, Bill Sykes’ brutal treatment of Nancy, and the Artful Dodger teaching Oliver to pick pockets will serve to recall the story and attract attention.

In his newest production for release through “A. P.”—“A Perfect Crime”—he is again setting a fashion for a new and popular type of story done in the best Dwan manner—a picture with speed, suspense, romance, beauty and simplicity.

Some time ago the Biograph Co. made a picture of "East Lynne" and about five years ago Fox made one with Theda Bara and Stuart Holmes. Now along comes Hugo Ballin with another "East Lynne," with results that are going to disappoint those who are acquainted with Mrs. Henry Wood’s old and well known novel. The new production, which will be released through Hodkinson, is an Americanized version of the English story and has been slightly altered, although the principal situations remain the same. Much of the dramatic force of the original has been lost in the telling here and several of the so-called "big" moments are marred in nearly every case by lack of care in detail.

And the story is not smoothly told. This may be due to poor cutting, but a choppy continuity is also at fault. In one instance the woman leaves her husband. A title following announces her arrival with her lover in Quebec. Despite the time it must have taken her to reach here, the next scene shows her husband just discovering her absence and searching the house for her. There are numerous poorly written titles, one referring to someone’s late arrival being due to “their absence.”

There are several matters which have very little semblance of possibility which also mar the dramatic force. The opening shot isn’t likely to afford much joy. It shows a coffin with the dead man’s creditors sitting around waiting to be paid before they will leave. The lawyer transacts the payments on the coffin. A train wreck fails to furnish a thrill.

Archibald Carlyle cannot explain to his wife the reason for his being with Barbara Hare, so Isabel goes away with Francis Levison. They go to Quebec, but after a time Levison deserts Isabel and she starts for her home. In the meantime Carlyle has searched in vain for his wife and finally marries Barbara, whose brother he is trying to save from conviction as a mur-derer. It turns out that Levison is really the mur-derer. Isabel, not fully recovered from the effects of injuries sustained in the wreck of the train which was bringing her home, finally reaches Carlyle’s home, where she dies.

Explain That It Is A New Production In Your Announcements
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

After “East Lynne” has gone through a careful re-editing process it should make a much better picture.
In its present state it hardly reaches the entertainment mark, mostly because of the choppy way in which the story is unfolded, due particularly to poor cutting and inappropriate sub-titles. Also, the production is too long. There is a sequence in which the father tells his very young son his own story in the form of a fairy tale. This might easily come out.

For those who play the picture there is a drawing power in the title, and in view of past productions of the same story it would be well to emphasize that this is a brand new production made by Hugo Ballin for Hodkinson release. If you played Mr. Ballin’s recent “Pagan Love” to satisfaction it might do to recall it in announcing his second, “East Lynne.” Edward Earle has a good following since the old Edison days.
His name may attract the “fan” alumnae.

DETAIL ......................... Adequate
CHARACTER OF STORY......Hero wrongly convicted of murder through his attempt to protect name of girl he loves
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION......About 5,000 feet

Despite its rather sensational title "The Devil's Confession" is a very simple story of a country romance which comes very near having a tragic ending. And the fine rural atmosphere is the principal appeal in this otherwise ordinary picture which is a bit crude if put to a comparison with the better pictures of today. The director hasn't made any effort to get away from mechanical development and the ending is obvious long before it is reached. Regardless of this, there is a certain amount of suspense and you're prepared to be disappointed in your own conclusion when they announce that the evidence which will clear the convicted man has come too late. They pass this off as a dream and then give you the ending you expect.

The photography is not the best and this is to be regretted since they had such fine settings and many attractive shots. Some of the titles are worded a bit too "flowery" and there is considerable repetition. The writer shows his partiality for "before dawn," "at dawn," etc.

There are no well known names among the members of the cast, but nevertheless there are several very capable players, particularly those handling the principal parts, those of the mother, her son, his sweetheart and the city "slicker." Mary Eberle is the mother. Frank Williams, Louise Lee and Harold Foshay are the others.

Bob Perry is jealous of the attention of Neil Drake, a city chap sojourning in the country for his health, to Rose, Bob's sweetheart. Bob reproaches Rose, who resents his lack of faith in her and in a fit of pique she attends a bazaar with Drake. Bob also attends with his mother and during the evening gets into a fight with a man who passes a remark against Rose's character. At the time Bob threatens to kill the man and later when he is found dead Bob is accused of the murder.

Circumstantial evidence convicts Bob and he is sentenced to death. Mrs. Perry appeals to the governor for a pardon for her son, but no evidence can be secured to save him. Several hours before the time for the execution a cap is found near the scene of the murder. The find brings forth a confession from the owner of the cap, Drake, who admits he killed the man when the latter attacked him, mistaking him for Bob. Bob's sister rides to the Governor's residence, reaching there in time to save her brother's life.

Will Go All Right With Folks Not Critical
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Exhibitors who pick part of their bookings from the state rights market may find "The Devil's Confession" a satisfactory offering unless they handle only first grade attractions. This picture, at the best, is only fair entertainment because of its very familiar story and typical old time "meller" development. It won't get by with folks educated to the best in pictures, because in parts it is very crude. On the other hand, in transient houses and communities where a less critical clientele is catered to, they will probably not complain.

In announcements you can talk about the rural atmosphere and make the most of the title in whichever way you think it will draw best. If you want them to know it's not as sensational as it sounds, catchlines can be worded to set them straight, and on the other hand if you think the title will attract because of its hint of something, you can stick to just the title itself.

CHARACTER OF STORY ......Triangle, in which the man tells the husband his intentions before the trouble starts

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .........4,900 feet

The fact that Jack London seems a little out of his element in the telling of such a story as, "The Little Lady of The Big House," did not prevent him from making it an interesting and popular tale. It may therefore be something of a disappointment to admirers of the story to find that the picturization doesn't altogether conform to the original. The character of Paula Forrest has undergone a change from London's character, and the ending of the story is different. However, the change has been made consistent all the way through, and a picture that entertains is the result.

A very adequate, and at times elaborate production has been given the story. All of the interior sets have been carefully made, and some well chosen exteriors, coupled with good photography, add noticeably to parts of the picture. Perhaps they have made a little too frequent use of the soft focus, but these shots have been really artistically done, and often enhance the beauty of the scene.

The three principal parts are in the hands of well known and capable players. They'll like Ora Carew as Paul Forrest. If she makes the character a different one from the Paula of the book, she makes her an altogether fascinating person, and plays all her scenes with intelligence. Her repression and poise in the big scenes will surely find favor with her audiences who appreciate delicate handling of a situation. A bit of faulty direction detracts from one of the scenes by making it too long. That is the one in which Forrest fights out his problem by himself. Nigel Barrie plays Evan Graham, the third side of the triangle, and gives a thoroughly satisfactory performance.

The eternal triangle situation seldom fails to interest, and this one has the additional advantage of being an unusual triangle, from the fact that both the man and the wife keep the husband informed as to what is going on. The development isn't very fast, and there isn't much action, but notwithstanding this fact, the interest is held all through, by skilful handling of the players, and by the unusual points of the narrative.

Three Good Names And An Unusual Triangle To Draw With

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

There are a number of good talking points to interest your patrons in this one. First, there are the names of the author and players. Jack London's is of course a very popular name, so that with "The Little Lady of The Big House," from which the picture was taken will be a big point in your advertising. In the cast, Nigel Barrie, Milton Sills, and Ora-Carew all have a following, and each of their names will have a drawing power with some. Another point that will attract is the fact that this triangle story differs radically from most of them. Make this point known by telling enough of the story to impress them with the fact that the man tells the husband that he is in love with his wife, and is going to try and win her. The feature offers possibilities for attractive catchlines. Stills of the girl's leap on horseback, and of the husband branding the blacksmith, will surely attract attention.
A Weak Story In The First Place And Then The Direction Is Poor

"TESTIMONY"
Stoll Film—Pathe

DIRECTOR .................. Guy Newall
AUTHOR .................... Alite and Claude Askew
SCENARIO BY ............... Guy Newall
CAMERAMAN ................ Bert Ford

AS A WHOLE .... A weak one; only one situation and no byplay to help it along STORY ... Hasn't the ingredients of a screen story DIRECTION ... Ordinary; has put in too much tedious detail in order to pad the story to feature length

PHOTOGRAPHY .............. Fair
LIGHTINGS .................. Fair
CAMERA WORK ................ Average
PLAYERS ...... Ivy Duke pleasing but not suited to the part; David Hawthorne good as hero; Mary Ronke exaggerates

EXTERIORS ...... Pretty; the best thing in the picture
INTERIORS ................. All right
DETAIL .................. Too much of it
CHARACTER OF STORY ... Son's unwelcome wife is finally driven out by his mother but later the mother gladly takes her back

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ....... 5,500 feet

As far as the story is concerned this is about the weakest the Stoll company has had. Lack of incident is its chief fault and there is no by-play or counter-plot which the director could work with to relieve the shortcomings of the main situation. He has had a difficult time of it making a feature and the result is a long, tedious lot of padding that almost completely kills whatever interest there might otherwise have been.

And the director has not shown good judgment in his treatment of one sequence in which the man's mother disapproves of her daughter-in-law's care of her own child. Also the title writer has forgotten to be discreet. Incidentally the picture depends almost wholly on sub-titles to tell its story. There is an unusually superfluous number of them. The exterior settings are beautiful, many of them unusual; they are about the only redeeming feature of "The Testimony," which, by the way, is a "misfit" title. Ivy Duke is the principal player, and while her work is satisfactory, she isn't particularly well suited to the part. David Hawthorne, as her husband, does the best work. Mary Ronke, as the Puritanical mother-in-law, reminds of the type which cartoonists dote on caricaturing.

Gillian Lyons lives with his mother, Rachel, a puritanical sort of person—and almost tyrannical in her supervision of her son, who braves his mother's anger, and marries the girl of his choice, Althea, a young school teacher. Rachel had long been training Lucinda, a domesticated girl, whom she had decided Gillian would marry. This defiance of her will was sufficient cause for her to vent her feelings upon Althea when Gillian brought her into the home.

And when Althea and Gillian's baby girl dies, Rachel says it is because Althea didn't take proper care of it. Finally Althea can stand her mother-in-law no longer, so she goes to an uncle. She enters society and tries to forget the past. But she is still in love with Gillian, and at last she returns to the farm and begs to be taken in. Rachel refuses but later has a change of heart. She takes Althea in and tries to make up for the past by taking care of her through a long illness. They keep the audience waiting an awful long time, but eventually Gillian, who has been searching for his wife, returns to his home and finds her waiting for him.

"TESTIMONY"
Stoll Film—Pathe

If you have been playing the Stoll program recently you are apt to hand them a disappointment in "The Testimony." If it is cut considerably it will have a much better chance. There isn’t even material enough for five reels. The last five hundred feet are altogether unnecessary. Everyone knows that the husband will eventually return to his wife, but they keep on showing a close-up of the wife and then one of the mother before they finally allow the husband to make his appearance. This drags the ending badly.

Perhaps if you played "The Lure of Crooning Water" and your people liked Ivy Duke, they may accept this one. However, if you do play it, secure a good accompanying program and make no promises. It would do all right for a double feature day. The title isn’t pertinent and hasn’t any drawing power which might be used in connection with catchlines.

Some Short Reels

"The Avenging Arrow"—Pathe
Type of production..............................melodramatic serial

This is Pathe's latest serial offering. Ruth Roland is the star and she is supported by a large and capable cast. There are to be fifteen episodes. The story is an adaptation by Jack Cunningham of the novel, "The Honeymoon Quest," by Arthur Preston Hankins.

The star, who needs no introduction to serial fans, is cast in a part which gives her every chance to put over numbers of thrills, and to register generally attractively in all her work. She looks very pretty, and is really charming in the character and costume of a Spanish senorita. Her leading man is Edward Hearn, an athletic and clean cut fellow, who makes a good type of hero. All the rest of the cast, including Virginia Ainsworth, S. E. Jennings and William Steele, are fully up to a standard.

Four episodes were reviewed, and through all of these an effective suspense and excitement has been maintained. There is no evidence of stalling, the action moving right along clearly and naturally from reel to reel. Holding to the standard of the first episodes, it should be a better than average serial offering. Good mountain locations, and some elaborate sets are also noticeably effective, and together with good photography, contribute a lot toward making the production one of first class appearance.

The story concerns the efforts of mysterious enemies to exterminate the heroine's family. She is a descendant of a den Kar. Spanish family whose home is in California, and in all the generations of the past each of her female ancestors has been killed on their twenty-first birthday. Anita escapes death, and with a young American takes up the task of uncovering the family's enemies and ending the menace. The excitement begins with her capture by these enemies.

Paramount Magazine—Famous Players

This issue is very short—about 600 feet—and contains only two subjects, both cartoons. The first one is short, and not overly funny, but the biggest part of the reel is a "Felix" cartoon by Pat Sullivan, and it is very funny. Felix becomes a hypnotist and hypnotizes everything in the picture, all of which makes for a big laugh. If you need a very short filler, this one will be perfectly acceptable.

"The Fighting Actor"—Universal
Type of production..............................2 reel Western

This short western hasn't much originality of theme, but it will get over well for all that, on the strength of Art Acord, the star, and an exciting fight. Acord is a fine type of cowboy star. He looks the part and rides and fights with a whole lot of pep. Even though the story is almost exactly like many other westerns, there is plenty of excitement and a good amount of suspense kept up through the whole thing. A thrill is furnished by Acord stopping a runaway team with a big leap onto the back of one of the horses. The hero is one of a band of stranded actors, who, with a long haired thespian, walk into a tough western town. The cowboys start to make it hot for them, but Acord gives them a riding exhibition that wins their respect. He gets a job on a ranch, foils the villain's attempt to steal the girl, and wins the lady himself. If they like westerns at all, this one should be very satisfactory.

Pathe Review No. 95—
Type of production..............................1 reel magazine

This issue starts off with a Hy Mayer "Travel laugh" entitled, "Such is Life in Summer," and is a combination of sketching and photography which is somewhat interesting because of this combination of drawings blending into motion pictures. The second subject shows the manufacture of pipe cases, and is only mildly interesting to the average spectator. Then comes the "Dance of Arabia," executed by Marie Tolman. Next is a slow motion bit, showing a hoop juggler in action. It shows clearly the skill required in his performance, and should also be good for a couple of laughs. Next is a colored nature study of spiders and their webs. It is pretty, but doesn't offer anything interesting. The reel ends with some pretty landscapes. Not above the average as a whole.

"Make It Snappy"—Pathe
Type of production..............................1 reel comedy

Squiz Pollard has put his long mustache back on for this one, and he seems to get away better than in the last few without it. He's supported by Marie Mosquini, Hughie Mack and Sunshine Sambo, and there is quite a lot of the stuff that is well put over. Most of it is old slapstick, but there's a new gag here and there and the old stuff is pretty sure fire. Squiz's an ice man, and he pulls a lot of trick stuff with his ice deliveries, sending the ice into the houses by itself, juggling 100 pounds chunks, and getting in bad with a newly married couple. The major of audiences will get a lot of laughs out of the reel, although some of the gags have been so recently used in other comedies that they may lose their punch.

"Superstition"—Century—Universal
Type of production..............................2 reel comedy

Featuring Harry Sweet, it is a first class comedy offering all the way through. The stuff is almost all new and every stunt in the piece, with the exception of a very short bit in the very first number, is very funny, and will maintain a surprising sense of what will register, and he never overdoes his gags. The laughs are many, and the stuff is the kind that almost anybody can appreciate. It's a slapstick most of the time, and all foolishness, but it's almost sure fire all the way through. It's amusing, but not by a wonderfully trained bulldog, whose antics will also call forth a number of chuckles. The start is a laugh, when Sweet, who is very superstitions, has a terrible time with a black cat who insists on crossing in front of him. The superstitious idea runs all through the picture, with some good gags in connection with several well known forms of superstition. This number is a good bet for any house.

"In Again, Out Again"—C. B. C. Film Sales
Type of production..............................1 reel comedy

This is a Hall Room Boys comedy, with Harry McCoy and Sid Smith in the characters of Percy and Perdie. They are the same two boys who appeared in "A Doggone Mixup," the last one of the series, and they put their stuff over in very good shape. Also this one has a novel idea for its basis. It's more or less a burlesque all the way through on the "inside stuff" in the moving picture studio life. The boys are broke, as usual, and they come to a studio looking for work after pulling a terrible bluff about owning a Rolls-Royce, at which they get caught, and which makes an amusing beginning. At the studio the spectator meets such famous people as Cecil DeSpill, Mary Smiles Splinter and Tom Ith. The rest of the picture is made up of the boys' troubles in the studio, where they always get in the wrong place at the wrong time and break up every scene. It's all amusing and some of it is very good, and you can undoubtedly satisfy them with it.

"When Eve Fell"—Universal
Type of production..............................1 reel comedy

The star of this one is Dotty Wolbert, although Eddie Barry shares about equally in the comedy. It's a funny idea, and there are just abomb a match in it to hold it up to par. The Eve referred to is a statue, which Dotty drops on the floor, and then has a terrible time getting it repaired. The whole family sees the broken statue, and all of their efforts to replace it -are quite absurd. Then the statue is put over several gags in a funny manner. If you've been playing any of these comedies you can figure this one as better than most of her previous offerings.

Counterclaims

Film Corp. A general denial of Triangle's charges against these defendants is made. The papers admit that the capital stock of the Western Import Co., Inc. was sold to the Reserve Film Corp. for $250,000.

Hyman Winik, as one of the defendants, has filed a counterclaim against Triangle. Winik alleges that on or about Dec. 27, 1917, he and the Western Import Co., Inc. purchased from Triangle the rights to "Mickey." Under the terms of the agreement Winik claims Triangle was to deliver 120,000 ft. of negative and one positive print. It is charged that only 20,000 ft. of positive was delivered and about $500 of the negative. For this reason Winik alleges he was damaged $250,000, for which he sues.

As a matter of fact, it was commented on that the move has been expected for some time. The Pathe is understood to be the opening of a matter of fact, the U. B.
